inch brown trout on a large, bushy dry fly in a public stream. He had the fish spotted from previous trips.

The technique literally calls for "thinking big." Generally, avoid the tiny streams since the biggest trout are more likely to be found in streams averaging at least 15-20 feet wide. There are, of course, plenty of exceptions. Also, your chances of getting a big brown (or rainbow) are probably as great in a stream under "general" regulations as on a "native" or "trophy" stream but be sure to choose a stream with fairly high water quality.

By all means, fish all the water. Don't just concentrate on the pools, the notholes and the undercuts. Those
