ACCOUNT BOOK

FORM 135

INSTRUCTIONS.

ACCOUNTS—Under this title enter charges made against persons who purchase any article from the society, and in favor of those who serve the society or furnish it with any article. If the item is paid for in cash the entry may be under the title of "cash," and this part of the book "accounts" reserved for debit and credit items not involving cash.

EXPENSE—Under this title enter all sums paid out which are part of what would constitute an expense account; such as postage, telegraphing, express and other small items, and not distributed to other accounts of the fair.

CASH—Here keep an account of money received and money paid out for the fair. If it is desired to have the balance show the exact amount on hand it will be necessary to make two entries of cash items going into other accounts; as, if money is paid out for postage once in the expense account and once in the cash. But it is presumed that most officers will be satisfied to use this as a handy memorandum book and not as a complete account book, and will transfer the items of this book to other accounts after the fair, and then make balances.

PRIVILEGES—The pages are divided into four spaces. Each purchaser should be given one space, and entries made therein of the terms of the payments made, and of other essential facts.

RACES—The use of this book will enable the secretary to make a minute of each entry received and of the fees collected and purses paid, and will form a convenient cash account concerning the race moneys. The record will also be handy at all times as a prompter to rely upon for information as to the entries. Each race should be given the two pages appearing at an opening of the book, and all items concerning a race be placed on the pages assigned in that race.

TICKET SELLERS—Most societies desire to have an accurate account kept of the gate tickets delivered to each seller each day, and the unsold ones that he returns each night. The delivery is often made hurriedly, and this book will be found convenient in keeping the account. One of the spaces should be set apart for each seller, and the record made of his doings as suggested by the column headings. The "ticket table" in the front part of the book will enable the values to be computed readily. Only the tickets given out to others to sell should be entered under this title.

COMPLIMENTARIES—Under this title make a list of the persons to whom complimentary tickets are issued. If the tickets are numbered, the corresponding numbers should be placed in the list.

BADGES—Under this title make a list of the persons to whom badges allowing admission to the grounds and grand stands are issued, the kind of badge and what inducement led to its issue.

TICKETS SOLD—The secretary is often required to sell a ticket for some special purpose and will find it convenient to enter all such transactions by themselves, in this part of the book.

MEMORANDUM—The secretary will be frequently reminded of events to occur, or things to be done, of which to keep them before the mind, it is essential to make a memorandum. This part of the book will serve this purpose, and also be a convenient place to enter such suggestions concerning the fair or for its improvement in the future, as it may be thought wise to record.

REMINDERS

In addition to the things suggested below, enter others which are thought of, and the dates on or before which they should be accomplished, then check off, from time to time, such as are fulfilled. This will insure all preparation for the fair being made at a seasonable period.

- Provide advertising matter .....
- Provide admission tickets and other printing .....
- Issue complimentarys to press, etc. ....
- Select Superintendents .....
- Buy hay and forage .....
- Provide committees and invite their presence .....
- Advertise closing time of race entries, and send a list of entries to the press. ....
- Engage policemen, gatemen, etc. ....
- Make all needed preparations for taking entries .....

COMMITTEE LIST.

If published, cut out of the paper, and paste on this page, a list of the committees into which the board is divided, and the members of each; otherwise write them out.
