NO SWEETER SOUND

4 Hunters Enjoy a Night of Their Favorite Music — the Howls of Fox Hounds on a Chase

By Paul Collins

JOURNAL SURRY COUNTY BUREAU

MEADOWS OF DAN, Va.

The dogs, about a dozen of them, huddled quietly in two cages on the backs of the pickup trucks.

There was nothing in front of them except the stillness of the black night, the woods and — somewhere in the darkness — red and silver foxes.

About 8:30, right on schedule, the four hunters opened the doors of the cages, and the lean hounds bounded into the thick woods.

The sounds began moments later, as soon as the hounds picked up the fox scent — a symphony of yaps and squalls and howls nipped half in two. Hound music. To a fox hunter, there is no sweeter sound.

The old men shut the doors on the cages and moved back to the clearing. One picked up a tape recorder and walked a short way into the woods. The other three settled into their lawn chairs and looked out into the darkness.

"I love to hear the dogs run," Dewey A. Tolbert, 67, said softly. "It's the same as music playing."

As they listened, a smile of recognition crept slowly across Edgar P. Pike's face as he cocked his ear to a high-pitched, rolling bark. It was Rowster, he said.

Pike, who is 84, pointed to another hunter, 82-year-old C.W. White. "Him and me has been hunting since I was 12 or 13 or 14," Pike said.

White is from Mount Airy, N.C. The other men are from Bassett, in Henry County, Va.

The man with the tape recorder, 72-year-old Ben Rea, has hunted with Pike for 40 years. From his position in the woods, he might — with a little luck — get to see the hounds run by at the heels of a fox. Luck, as it turned out, wasn't with him, but he stayed in the woods a couple of hours anyway, recording the sound of the hounds.

The others followed the hunt from their chairs. Pike, who had been listening intently, said that two foxes were on the run. He pointed a finger to the east where one pack of hounds was barking, then to the west, where another pack was doing the same.

Rea said that he has one dog in the hunt, Billy Boy, who just won't quit. "He's crippled. He got hit by a car that threw his hip out of place," Rea said. "But he'll run all night tonight — and half the day tomorrow if I don't catch him."

A good fox hound is born, not made, Pike said. "You can't teach a dog to beat his brains out all night running. It's got to be born in him."

The same is true of fox hunters, he said. "Nobody would stay out here night after night for a lifetime. It's born in you."

The hunt took place on 115 acres that is known as the Slate Mountain Fox Pen, five miles north of Meadows of Dan near the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Unlike other kinds of hunting, the goal here, from the human point of view, is not to catch the prey but merely to chase it. No guns are allowed in the fox pen, and none of the hunters wants his dog to kill a fox. But the dog, not holding the human point of view, tries with all his heart to do exactly that, and in the excitement of the chase he makes music with his mouth. And for his master, that's the whole point.

The foxes generally outrun or outsmart the hounds, say by backtracking, the hunters said. And some foxes run up trees. A gray fox will climb a tree "as slick as a stove pipe," White said.

There were about 35 foxes in the main pen when it opened last November. About 20 are left. Most of the 15 died of natural causes or escaped the fox pen by crawling under the six-foot-tall chain-link fence surrounding it, said Hank M. Alderman, the president of Slate Mountain Fox Pen Inc.

Elvin T. Hancock, the secretary-treasurer of Slate Mountain Fox Pen Inc., said that the hounds may have killed some of the foxes. But he doesn't think so, he said.

As many as 20 hounds a night are allowed to chase the foxes in the main pen. When more foxes are needed, they are brought in from a holding pen, which has 18 foxes, Alderman said.

The foxes usually outsmart the dogs by backtracking. Some of them have died of natural causes, and others escaped.

See HUNTERS, Page B10

HUNTERS

In a 115-acre pen, it doesn't take the hounds long to pick up the scent of foxes, and they run the foxes at full speed — up to 30 mph — until the dogs are exhausted, Alderman said.

Hunters are supposed to round up their dogs at daybreak, so that the foxes can rest before the next hunt starts that night.

The foxes are fed dry dog food every other day and chicken parts on Sundays. They are vaccinated and treated to prevent red mange, a skin disease that has killed a lot of foxes in the area, Alderman said.

Alderman said that the pen was started to give hunters a place to take their fox hounds without fear of their getting run over or running away when they catch the scent of a deer.

"A lot of people just come here to hear the hounds run," Alderman said. "They sit in the cabin, chewing tobacco and telling tall tales."

The cabin is a 14-by-14-foot building of unpainted plywood. Inside, a lantern casts a soft light over a fake-leather sofa and a couple of worn, stuffed chairs. On the dirt-and-gravel floor is a 1-gallon jug for the hunters' chewing tobacco. It is almost full.

There is a mattress in the cabin, but no one in the group uses it. Pike said that he never sleeps when he comes to the fox pen. "If I wanted to sleep, I'd stay at home where I've got a bed," he said.

Later he said, "I've got arthritis so bad I can't get to sleep if I don't get in the right shape (position)."

About 1:30 a.m., Pike's dog Rowster came whimpering back to the clearing.

"I don't know what's wrong with him," said Pike, who clearly was distressed. "He's (usually) been running them all night."

After Rowster rested a bit, Pike walked toward the woods, hoping that the dog would follow. Rowster did, and picked up the fox scent again. He let out a squall and disappeared into the woods.

A few other dogs, including Slim, came back within an hour. Tolbert, Slim's master, said that Slim once got so tired chasing foxes that his tail lost its curl.

About 2:30 a.m., another of Tolbert's hounds came slinking back. Tolbert, his patience gone, met the dog and swatted it with his hat.

"Get out of here," he said. "Every one of you is coming out." After a few minutes, he walked toward the woods, and the dog followed and took off again.

About 3 a.m., another hound wandered into the clearing. The hide around its eyes had been scratched raw, probably from brush and limbs. Someone put it back in the cage.

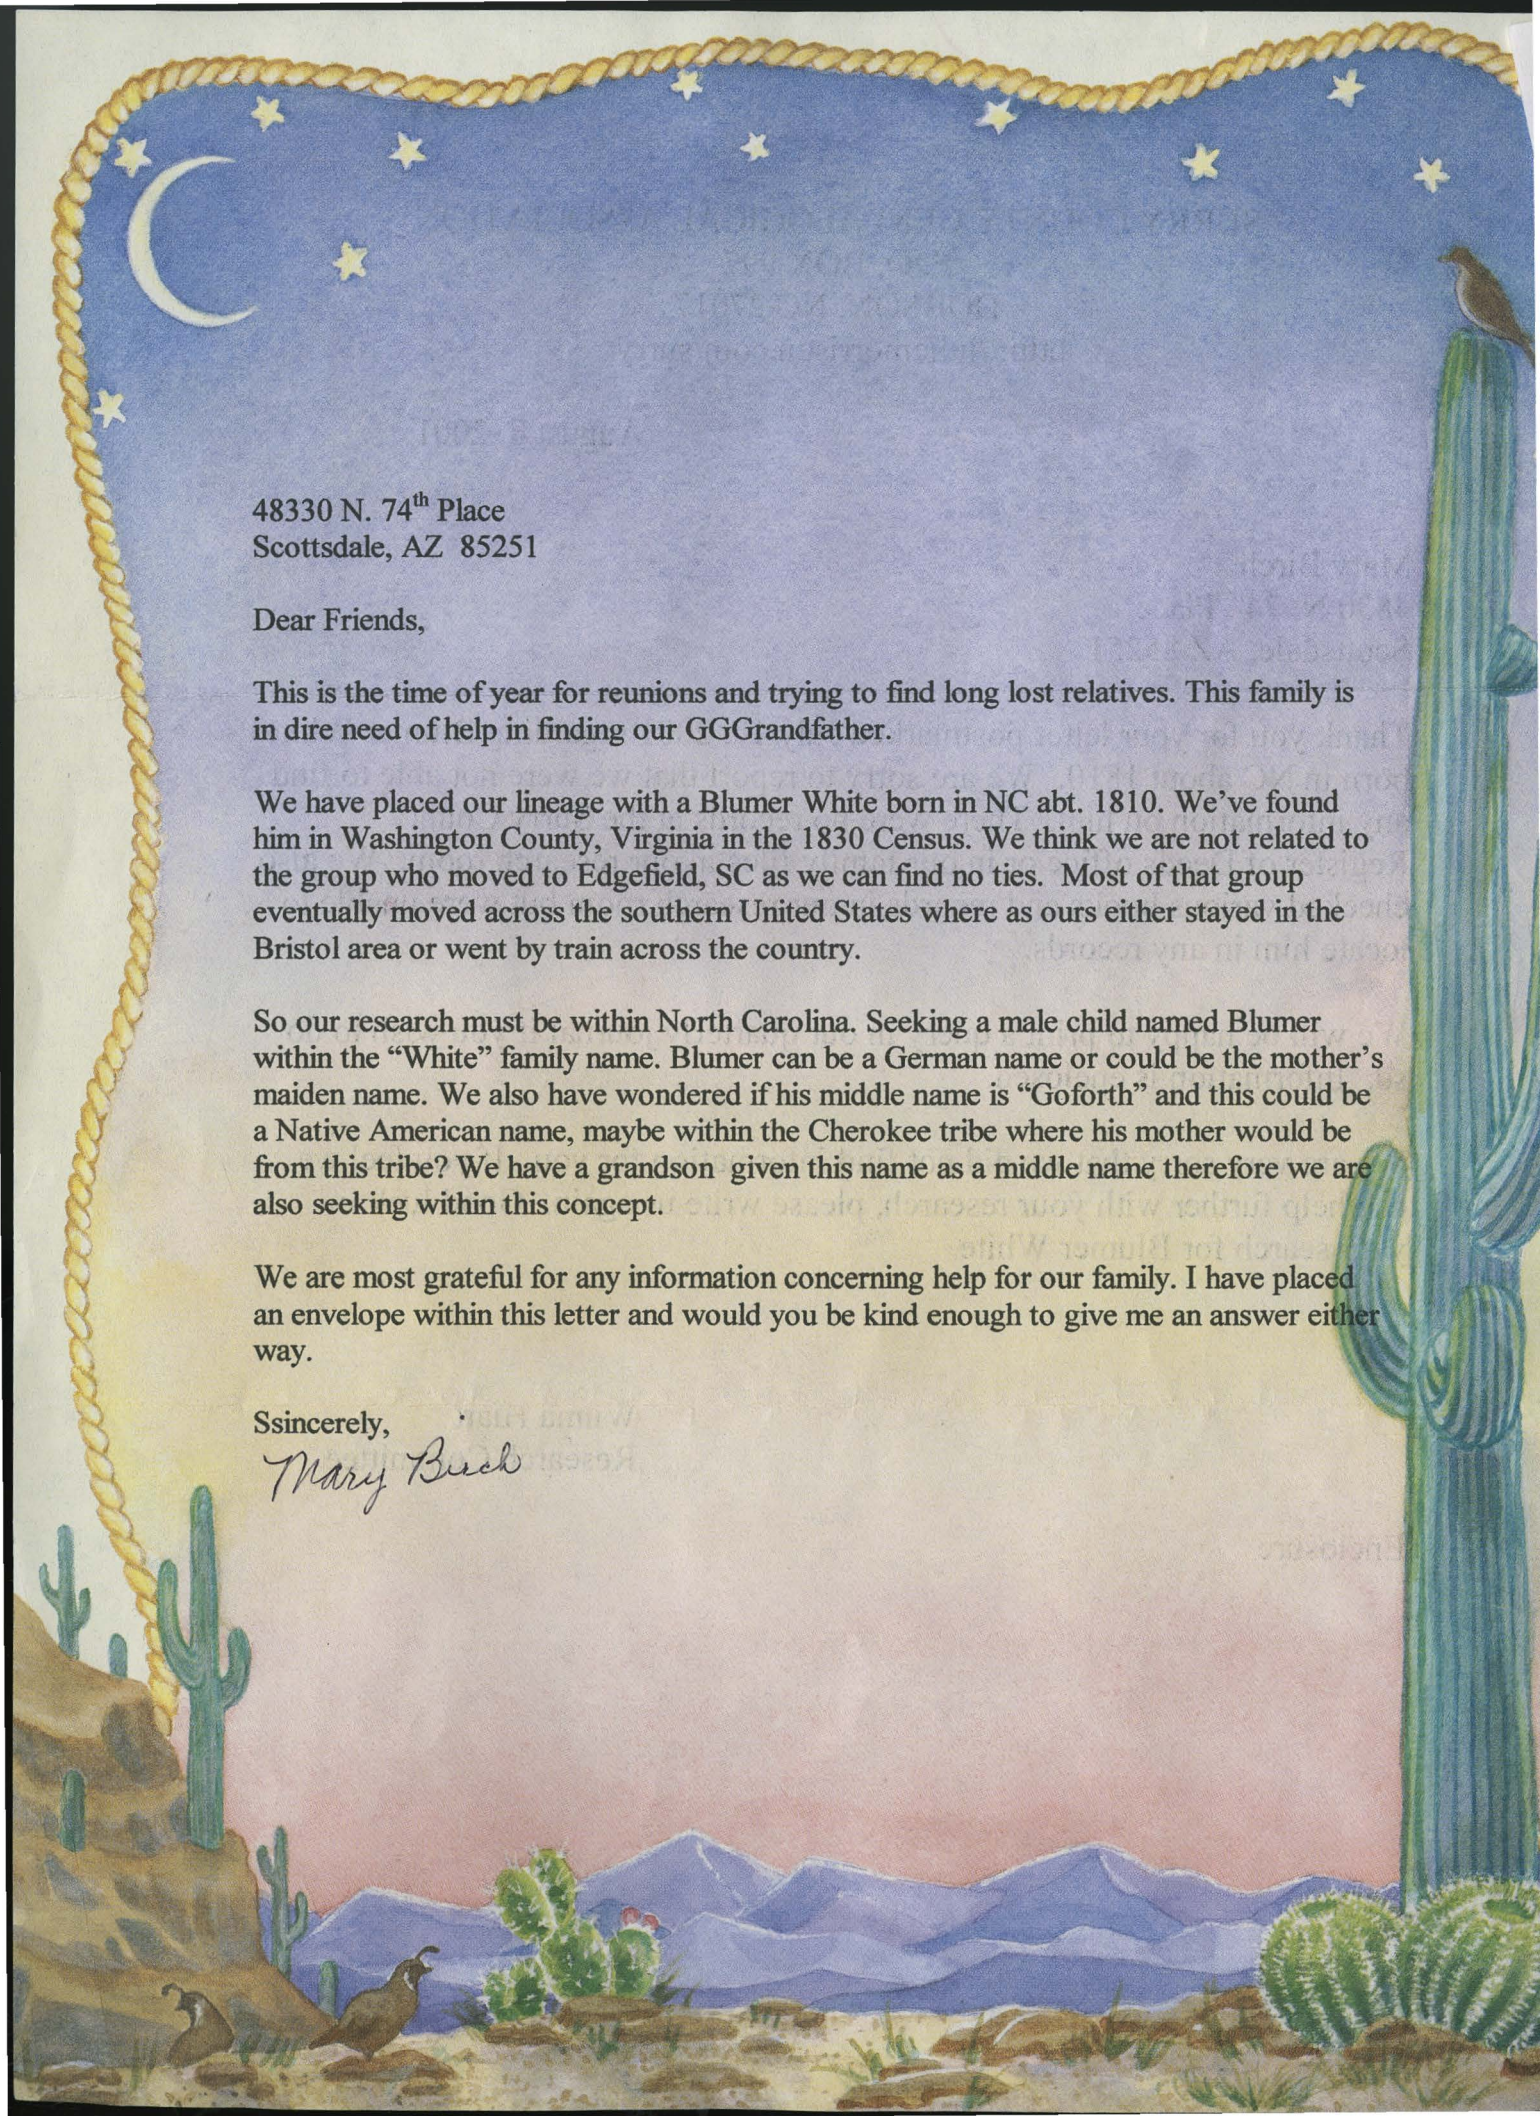

The dogs were not the only participants in the hunt who were wearing out. Not long past 3, a silver fox came into the clearing. He seemed tame, as though he expected a hunter to give him leftover eggs and sausage.

The fox ran away when someone made a move toward him, but no one expected him to go far. The hunt was winding down. "He'll be back," Rea said.

By 5:45, all but three of the dogs had come back to the clearing. The others had been put in their cages.

By 7 a.m., when it was time to leave, two of the dogs were still chasing foxes. The others were sleeping soundly in the trucks. The men, now haggard from lack of sleep, began searching for the two stragglers.

Hancock arrived at the fox pen and helped the men collect their dogs. After the men drove off, Hancock opened the sacks of dry dog food at the back of his truck and scooped the food into wooden feeders scattered around the pen for the foxes. A few foxes began to come warily into the clearing for their breakfasts. It was time to eat and rest. They had a big night ahead of them.

Dear Friends,

This is the time of year for reunions and trying to find long lost relatives. This family is in dire need of help in finding our GGGrandfather.

We have placed our lineage with a Blumer White born in NC abt. 1810. We've found him in Washington County, Virginia in the 1830 Census. We think we are not related to the group who moved to Edgefield, SC as we can find no ties. Most of that group eventually moved across the southern United States where as ours either stayed in the Bristol area or went by train across the country.

So our research must be within North Carolina. Seeking a male child named Blumer within the "White" family name. Blumer can be a German name or could be the mother's maiden name. We also have wondered if his middle name is "Goforth" and this could be a Native American name, maybe within the Cherokee tribe where his mother would be from this tribe? We have a grandson given this name as a middle name therefore we are also seeking within this concept.

We are most grateful for any information concerning help for our family. I have placed an envelope within this letter and would you be kind enough to give me an answer either way.

Sincerely,

Mary Busch

Thank you for your letter postmarked July 17, 2001 regarding Blumer White born in NC about 1810. We are sorry to report that we were not able to find any information on him. There were no records at the Surry County Register of Deeds office or in our family files in our research room. We also checked various books and records in our research room but were unable to locate him in any records.

We will be happy to print a query in our quarterly journal if you wish to do so. Information is enclosed.

We are very sorry that we did not find information for you. If you feel we can help further with your research, please write us again. Good luck in your search for Blumer White.

Dear Agnes:

I have enclosed a family chart on James C. White. Other than the fact that he lived in Mt. Airy I do not have any other information. He was living in Mt. Airy in 1907, the year his father Jacob White died in Winston-Salem.

James C. White had two brothers living in 1907. Joseph A. White was a Baptist minister and teacher, and lived in Lenoir, Shelby, Taylorsville and other towns in western North Carolina. He died in Taylorsville (NC) in 1922. He was a graduate of Wake Forest. His younger brother Jacob Lee White was also a Baptist minister and was pastor of The First Baptist Church in Raleigh, Asheville, Elizabeth City, Greensboro, Durham and Miami, Florida where he died in 1948. He was also a graduate of Wake Forest.

I hope you can find a cemetery listing for James C. White so we can find an obituary in the Mt. Airy paper which might give us the names of those who survived him.

James C. White may have married in Surry County. This would probably have been around 1875 (he was born in 1854) If his marriage license could be found it might state who his parents were.

Look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

Harvey
