TO TAKE A STAND

In recent months, much of controversy has been heard from the Women's Liberation movement. It, and those associated with it, have drawn national recognition, in the forms of ridicule and praise, scorn and condemnation, taunt and acclamation.

Perhaps the individuals in this movement should be praised for one noteworthy characteristic, however: their conviction and belief in the principles they hold.

It must be conceded by even the most ardent opponent of the Women's Lib movement that those associated with it indeed have a profound dedication to its objectives.

This dedication probably has its roots in an event which occurred 54 years ago, an event of significance in its day, but which seems to have been lost over the ensuing years.

On November 1, 1916, for the first time in the history of the United States, a woman was elected to the U. S. Congress. She was Jeanette Rankin, who served from 1917 until 1919 as the Congresswoman-at-large from Montana.

Perhaps her most outstanding characteristic was her resolution--her firmness and ability to formulate a good opinion and defend it.

She wasted no time in promoting her convictions, evident in the fact that on the very day she was elected to Congress she openly opposed President Woodrow Wilson's views on World War I.

. . . Elected again in 1940, she was similarly noted in 1941 as the only Representative to cast a vote against entering World War II.

Even though her vote had no effect on the almost-unanimous endorsement of (America's entry into) the war, she did not "join the bandwagon." She steadfastly held her ground, remaining aloof from those enthusiastic about the war.

This is not to suggest that she was morally or diplomatically correct in her decision, nor that her political position should be defended from a diplomatic standpoint, nor that it should be commended from a political point of view. However, it did take more than a superficial interest and conviction on her part to vote the way she did.

A valuable commodity in an age of half-hearted ambition is sincere dedication. Perhaps if more individuals held well-defined principles, some of the confusion and chaos prevalent in today's turbulent society might be alleviated.

JUNIORS HONOR SENIORS WITH "MOONLIGHT AND ROSES"

On Saturday night, April 24, the Juniors honored the class of 1971 with a lovely banquet-prom held in the school gymnasium, from 7-11:30 p.m.

For the first time in the history of North Surry, outside dates were allowed at the banquet as well as the prom.

The gymnasium was beautifully decorated, carrying out the theme of "Moonlight and Roses". A mural in the lobby lunchroom wall portrayed a dancing couple against a background of a full moon and full blown red roses.

Ricky Cornett, junior, gave the invocation, followed by a welcoming speech by Jerry Collins, junior class president. Then Eddie Beasley, senior class president, responded with a toast, "Thanks for the Memory."

A delicious meal of turkey and dressing topped off with strawberry shortcake was served to approximately 385 persons. Lovely background music was provided by Bennie Younger at the organ. The meal was served by freshmen and sophomore girls in appropriate waitress dress. Several sophomore boys and girls checked wraps.

Richard Wicker of Parkland High School was the guest speaker. He gave a very interesting talk entitled "Both Sides Now". Roberta Blankenship sang the song "Both Sides Now", accompanied by John Shelton, guitarist, and Dale Atkins sang the theme song, "Moonlight and Roses".

Members of the Junior class portrayed members of the Senior class in a humorous skit entitled "Moonstruck Seniors". Bill Hall was portrayed by Kenny Lewis, Pat Towe by Dena Dollyhigh, Gary Watson by Jimmy Sumner, Ann Marshal by Pam Stamper, Sammy Brim by Gary Hiatt, Robert "Hoot" Gibson by John McDaniels, Sue Nunn by Clara Bunker, Gail Hull by Rebecca Badgett, and James Hall by Dwight Atkins.

After the banquet everyone retired to the lobby for a short intermission while the gymnasium floor was cleared for dancing.

The Varcels from Thomasville, N. C. provided dance music for the prom.

The event was enjoyed by everyone who attended, and certainly left the Seniors with wonderful memories.

LAUGH-IN

The doctor darting through his waiting room several times and noticing the same fidgety patient, quipped to him, "Don't get well-I'll be right back."

Two youngsters were walking home from Sunday School after having been taught a lesson on the devil. One little boy was overheard saying to the other, "What do you think about all this devil business?" The other youngster replied thoughtfully, "Well, you know how Santa Claus turned out. It's probably just your dad."

A woman was about to leave her house wearing a mini skirt, fishnet stockings, poorboy sweater, plastic earrings, and white lipstick. At the door her little daughter looked her up and down, then exclaimed, "Mommy, you look like a dead teenager!"

A flying saucer landed squarely in front of one of Miami Beach's most lavish hotels, and out of it poured a score of little men. "What do you fellows want?" quavered a doorman, poised for flight. "There's only one thing, really" the leader said, beaming, "Little women."

A young couple bought a parakeet which would only say, "Let's neck." A preacher suggested that they put his bird, which always said, "Let us pray," in the same cage with the dilequent bird so that the latter might learn the more uplifting phrase.

When the two were put together, the couple's bird said, as usual, "Let's neck," Whereupon the preacher's bird said, "My prayers have been answered."
