SCC stresses excellence at kickoff

By ELENI CHAMIS
Staff Reporter

DOBSON — More than 200 members of the Surry Community College (SCC) family gathered here Friday to kick off another school year.

SCC's fall semester classes actually don't begin until Tuesday, but SCC faculty and trustees were getting pumped for the year a little ahead of time.

"Each and every person here is a special one," Swanson Richards, SCC president said. "This foundation is alive and kicking. You have all had a very supportive role in this institution. We appreciate everyone's continuing support to educate our citizens and elevate the economy of our area of the state.

"This is just an awfully good way to begin a year," he said. "I get real excited every year and a little nervous too when my adrenaline starts pumping. I'm kind of like a coach before a ballgame."

In 1965, SCC had 181 students, Richards said. This year, SCC is anticipating about 2,500 day and evening students.

"We should continue to strive for the best," he said. "The best courses and the best programs possible for our students.

"This is a challenge," he said. "A challenge to have the best carpenter program. The best nursing program. The best in everything."

Minnie Hyler agreed. The retired English teacher, who taught at SCC for 14 years, said: "This is one of the most wonderful places in the world to work. Always has been. SCC hasn't changed much since I started here, except that there's more students. This is such a friendly atmosphere and the students are so nice."

Richards said: "I'm more appreciative of our students than anyone else. The students that come here are interested in helping themselves. You've got to do that if you want others to help you. That's a reflection of attitudes of the faculty and staff.

Three SCC faculty members have been chosen for teaching excellence since 1986 and were given National Teaching Excellence Awards. The University of Texas gives the awards.

Joe Maye, who has been teaching psychology for 21 years at SCC, won the award for the 1986-87 school year. Math professor Bill McCathren, a 17-year SCC veteran, won the award for 1987-88. The 1988-89 winner was Kathy Woodruff, a nursing professor for 13 years.

Richards said, "Thank you for making this such an excellent place for learning."

February is proclaimed 'Community College Month' by Gov. Martin

Governor Martin has proclaimed February 'Community College Month' in North Carolina.

He described the state's 58 community colleges as 'a unique and valuable resource' and noted that last year these schools enrolled 662,000 adults in one or more classes.

In addition to its original mission of providing technical/vocational training and college transfer programs to adults, the NC Community College System "reaches out to adults lacking basic literacy skills and provides them with free classes and training in order to help them take their productive places in a rapidly changing society," Martin said.

In this area, Surry Community College serves Surry, Yadkin and surrounding counties in North Carolina and Virginia, with current enrollment of more than 5,000.

On Sunday, March 4, SCC will hold graduation services recognizing people who have received their GED (high school equivalency). Over 200 have received high school diplomas through this program.

SCC is also conducting adult basic education classes at over 20 different locations in Surry and Yadkin counties, to teach people how to read and write. Currently, 541 people are enrolled in this literacy effort.

Kansas couple researches roots at Surry college

DOBSON — A Kansas couple with North Carolina family ties visited Surry Community College recently to pursue research on the Hutchins-Hutchens family. The wife is a prize-winning genealogist and writer of national prominence.

Robert E. and Rita H. Townsend of Garden City, Kansas, spoke warmly of the Tar Heel state, mentioning the fact that this is one of several visits they've made here, but the first stop-over at Surry Community College, where Mrs. Townsend did extensive research in the college's genealogy collection.

Mrs. Townsend is a certified genealogist and author of what Surry Community College staff member and genealogist Carlos Surratt says is one of the most definitive and well-written genealogy publications he has ever seen.

Her book, "Hutchins-Hutchens, Descendants of Strangeman Hutchins," was published in 1979, and in 1982, won the prestigious Jacobus Award from the Society of American Genealogy.

Mrs. Townsend's grandfather was a Hutchins and a descendant of Strangeman Hutchins of James River, Va., who moved to Yadkin County near what is now Deep Creek Meeting. Several of his nine or 10 children later moved with their families to the same community.

Being Quakers, the Hutchins family had strong feelings about slavery. Partly because of their beliefs, some migrated to Ohio and later to Kansas. Many descendants remain in North Carolina, however, and tracing their ancestry has been one of Mrs. Townsend's projects, to be compiled into a supplement to her 1979 publication.

Mr. Townsend is a native of Wilson and still has descendants in Eastern North Carolina. He is a retired corporate pilot, does aerial photography and is a balloonist. In addition to her genealogy research and writing, Mrs. Townsend teaches piano.

February: Community College Month

The Tribune, Elkin-Jonesville, N.C., Wednesday, February 7, 1990

DOBSON — Governor Martin has proclaimed February "Community College Month" in North Carolina.

He described the state's 58 community colleges as "a unique and valuable resource" and noted that last year these schools enrolled 662,000 adults in one or more classes.

In addition to its original mission of providing technical/vocational training and college transfer programs to adults, the N.C. Community College System "reaches out to adults lacking basic literacy skills and provides them with free classes and training in order to help them take their productive places in a rapidly changing society," Martin said.

In this area, Surry Community College serves Surry, Yadkin and surrounding counites in North Carolina and Virginia, with current enrollment of more than 5,000.

On Sunday, March 4, SCC will hold graduation services recognizing people who have received their GED (high school equivalency). Over 200 have received high school diplomas through this program.

SCC Interested In Serving As Central Site For Program

News Staff Report

DOBSON — Surry Community College is among three college institutions that have expressed an interest in serving as a central site for Winston-Salem State University's extension program for registered nurses.

The program is the result of a grant the university received to begin planning the program for registered nurses in nine northwestern North Carolina counties who want to obtain a bachelor's degree.

The grant was awarded by the Area Health Education Centers Program of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill for a six-month planning period ending June 30. The funds for the off-campus RN-BSN Mobility Program were secured through a proposal by Sylvia A. Flack, coordinator of the nursing program at Winston-Salem State University.

The proposal calls for extending the RN-BSN Mobility Program that is now being offered on campus to an area centrally located to the counties of Surry, Alexander, Stokes, Caldwell, Wilkes, Yadkin, Ashe, Alleghany and Watauga.

Registered nurses with an associate degree or a nursing diploma in these areas would be eligible for the program. The students, who will need to complete the 67 hours of general education and support courses before entering the program, may take the classes on campus or by extension through WSSU's continuing education division. Relevant courses taken at community colleges and other colleges will be evaluated for transfer credit.

In developing the proposal, Flack said a survey of directors of nursing facilities in the nine counties revealed that about only 43 of the 600 registered nurses employed in these areas held bachelor of science degrees in nursing. The survey also found a total of 1,777 hospital beds serving a rural and transient population of about 239,000.

"A large percentage of the nursing directors who were interviewed indicated that a bachelor of science degree nursing program would help the nurses in these areas," said Flack. "The directors also indicated that the bachelor's degree is significant in nurses' promotion to management levels and enhancement of their career plans."

Flack noted that the nursing directors also would be willing to allow flexible scheduling for nurses who wanted to continue their education. She said that the university hopes to have the program going by the summer, provided additional funding is secured.

SCC proposes $3.5 million building, program expansion

Surry Community College is proposing a $3.5 million expansion that would allow new or expanded programs in nursing, dental hygiene and child care.

Swanson Richards, college president, said Thursday that the school plans on submitting requests to the Surry County Board of Commissioners for around $1 million and to the state for about $2.5 million.

The money would be used primarily for building a new facility to house the registered nursing program and renovating existing buildings, Richards said. The Board of Trustees decided at its meeting Monday to request the funds.

Included in the construction projects are a building with 18,000 square feet, of which between 4,000 and 6,000 square feet would be used for the nursing program, Richards said. He added the college's registered-nurse program badly needs the additional space.

The new building also would house other medically related training programs such as those for licensed practical nurses, dental hygienists, dental assistants and child-care workers, according to Richards.

A paralegal program would be offered in existing classrooms.

The school would have to seek permission from the N.C. Board of Community Colleges to offer the new programs. Permission also would be needed from the state Board of Nursing if the college is to offer the licensed practical nurse program.

The licensed practical nurse, dental assistant and child-care worker programs would be one-year courses of study. Dental hygienist and paralegal programs would last two years.

The child-care workers program would provide both classroom and clinical instruction. Students would get their clinical experience by working in a child-care center with 75 to 85 children. The center also would serve as a day-care facility for the children of students and faculty of Surry Community College, and would be open to the public.

Richards said he hopes the new building, housing the health-related and child-care programs, would be completed by the fall quarter of 1992.

The school may have to implement one new program at a time, depending on whether money for the programs is made available, Richards said. He added he hopes the paralegal program, since it will be taught in existing space, can be started this fall.

Magician to perform

DOBSON — Bob Garner, magician, comedian, and entertainer, will perform at Surry Community College Monday, Feb. 12, under sponsorship of the Student Government Association.

While primarily for students, staff, and faculty, the performance is open to the public and is free. Activities will begin at 11:30 a.m., with a "teaser" get acquainted session in the college cafeteria. At 12:30 p.m. Garner will perform in the Teaching Auditorium.

Garner specializes in college campus appearances. Indiana University officials said of his performance there: "There are many talented magicians in the entertainment world, and there are many comedians who create a laugh a minute; however, it is rare to find a combination of both. Bob Garner is that rarity."

He performs at 150 colleges, clubs, and hotels each year. He has been practicing magic tricks since age 8.

SCC Officials Look At Expansion Plans

Mt Airy News 2-15-90

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Surry Community College officials have begun discussing a major $3.5 million expansion project that would include four new college programs and another building on the campus.

The SCC Board of Trustees has directed the college administration to request the $3.5 million in state and local funds for the plans as well as seek approval for the four new programs. The plans include offering instruction in the paralegal, Licensed Practical Nursing (LPN), dental hygienist and child-care worker fields.

At a board meeting held this week, trustees stated that additional space at the college would be needed if the programs are approved. The board directed SCC President Dr. Swanson Richards to request $1 million in local funds from the Surry County Board of Commissioners and $2.5 million from the state to carry out the plans for the new building and programs.

According to Richards, college officials presently are planning surveys to establish a need for the programs. For example, Richards said attorneys in the area will be interviewed to determine a need for more lawyers and if there is an interest in the paralegal field.

"The survey will be a two-prong thing to indicate to the N.C. Department of Community Colleges that people want training and to prove to them that there are jobs available in the area," said Richards.

He said it will be at least three months before the surveys are conducted, adding that there is a lot of work involved in asking the Department of Community Colleges to approve new programs.

If they are approved, Richards said there will be a need for the new classroom building to be constructed on the college campus. The structure would contain lab classrooms for the new programs.

Richards said he will be making the $1 million request to the county commissioners "at an appropriate time." He said he also will request the $2.5 million from the state Department of Community Colleges and General Assembly.

"Money has to be appropriated to the Department of Community Colleges from the General Assembly. And the board of trustees and administration have to match it up with local funds.," he explained.

An electronics/computer science building constructed two years ago is the newest building on the college campus. Next to that, the library is the most recent facility added at the college; it was built around 1977.

Richards discussed the programs proposed to be started at SCC, including the need for an expanded nursing program, saying that the college received 300 applications for nursing studies this year and was able to accommodate 65 nursing students. He said that figure would need to be decreased to 55 students for adequate training in the program.

See SCC, page 10

SCC

The size of the nursing program also depends on how much clinical experience can be offered to students. "We have to work very closely with the hospital and similar settings to find clinical space as part of their training education. We are limited somewhat by the numbers that can be taken and the type of experience that can be offered," Richards said.

The nursing program, which was transferred from the local hospital to the college campus in 1970, has just about run out of classroom space, according to the SCC president. He explained that the department was moved into a building that formerly housed the Business Department, adding that "now we have simply outgrown that particular area."

A day-care facility that is being proposed also would have a two-fold purpose, Richards said, in that students and staff members with children could use the facility and it could be utilized to train child care workers.

Richards said the college is exploring a facility that could serve between 75 to 85 children and probably would consider providing it to people in the community also. He said college students would mostly use the center from the morning hours until 2 p.m. and during evening class periods, which would leave the facility without many children during the afternoon.

The college president pointed out that a male/female ratio change at the college shows the potential need for a day-care facility. The ratio of 60 percent male students to 40 percent female students that existed when the college first opened has been reversed, he said.

Richards also said that high school juniors and seniors in the college's service area are now targeted for surveys about their interest in becoming paralegals, dental hygienists and dental assistants. "We know from conferring with those in the profession that there is a good local job market for trained dental hygienists and dental assistants. And similar career possibilities exist for paralegals."

Richards said that adding the programs would provide well-trained people for jobs in those professions "And after all, that's a key part of ou[illegible] total mission," he commented.

Editorial

SCC's Timing Is Bad

We admire Surry Community College for wanting to expand its facilities and offer programs to help meet growing employment needs in this area. But the college's seeking of $1 million in local funds for the project comes at a bad time considering the building needs of our elementary and high schools.

SCC has announced a $3.5 million expansion plan that would bring four new academic programs to its campus along with another building. The programs would offer training in the day-care, Licensed Practical Nursing (LPN), dental hygienist and paralegal fields. College officials say there is a need for those types of workers in the area and they are planning surveys to show that people want the training and that there are jobs available.

Approval of the programs by the appropriate officials would require another classroom building. You may remember that the college added a computer science and math building a couple of years ago, enhancing an already fine campus often praised for its leadership and academics.

That is precisely what worries us when considering the $1 million in local monies Surry Community College plans to seek for the project, to go along with $2.5 million requested from the state to cover the $3.5 million price tag. The college has become such an upscale institution, one of Surry County's brightest aspects, that it makes the glaring deficiencies of our public schools all the more apparent.

At a time when the college is looking toward the $1 million in county funds, students at Westfield Elementary and other schools are having to attend classes in old, deteriorating buildings — quite a contrast to the sparkling facilities at Surry Community College. And the old buildings are becoming more dilapidated by the minute, as county officials decide which way to go on a bond referendum to pay for new structures.

The referendum aside, we think that if the county has $1 million to devote to educational facilities, it ought to be used for our suffering elementary and high schools first.

Certainly, the college is wise by recognizing a need for new programs in this area, day-care and nursing especially, and trying to fill the void. After all, one of the purposes of a community college is to mirror the economic needs of its service area and offer training accordingly.

But in looking at this in relation to the funding request, it should be pointed out that there must first be elementary and high school students before there are college students; and the facilities for that younger set deserve the first attention in this case.

JOINT EDUCATION PACKAGE

Bonds for SCC

Now it's Surry Community College's turn to ask for a big hunk of money. The college is looking at a $3.5 million expansion program which would require a $1 million injection from the county, to be matched with $2.5 million from state sources.

The college wants a new home for expanded nursing and other medically-related programs, such as dental hygiene and child care. It would also like to add a paralegal program.

There is little doubt these would be welcome additions. While applications are declining for the state's four-year colleges, community college enrollments are experiencing healthy increases. With costs for a traditional college education skyrocketing, the community colleges are becoming the institution of choice for far more students.

The problem for Surry County, as always, is finding the money. For years the needs of the school systems have been neglected. Only in the last couple have the commissioners freed up significant amounts to replace some aging, dysfunctional and unsafe structures. Much more is needed—more than the county can come up with on its own—and the commissioners seem to be coming around to the necessity of having a bond referendum.

With more pressing needs in the public schools, it will be difficult for the commissioners to allocate $1 million to SCC, even with the generous state match.

That doesn't mean, however, the project is doomed. The needs of SCC can be met in the same way as those of the public schools—through a bond referendum. It could be held in conjunction with a referendum on general school bonds. The two could be packaged together as a plan to meet the county's educational needs for years to come, and we're confident the taxpayers of Surry County would support both.

Surry Community College Makes Expansion Plans

Four new programs may be added to Surry Community College's curriculum according to college reports. The college's Board of Trustees have announced a plan for college administration to request approval for the new programs. Paralegal, Licensed Practical Nursing program, Dental Hygienist, and Child Care Worker were discussed at the regular meeting on February 12.

It was pointed out that additional space at the college is needed for the expanded RN Nursing program, along with space for the additional programs.

SCC President Dr. Swanson Richards was authorized to request $1 million in local funds from Surry County Commissioners and $2.5 million from the state to carry out these projects.

Richards pointed out that SCC this year has some 300 applicants for nursing studies. The RN program was expanded last year, and additional space is needed for it.

"This still leaves a large number of people eager to enter the nursing profession; therefore, starting a LPN curriculum provides a logical alternative for many of those who cannot be accommodated in the current RN curriculum," Richards said. LPN's can move up through the SCC nursing program to become RN's if they so choose.

Richards added that studies have shown a significant need for day-care facilities for children of students and faculty at SCC, enough, he said, to justify establishing a day care-nursery worker facility which would not only serve the needs, but would also provide a laboratory experience for training programs in the field of home-type care at all age levels.

Richards also said that high school juniors and seniors in the college service area are now being surveyed about interest in becoming paralegals, dental hygienists, and dental assistants.

"We know from conferring with those in the profession that there is a good local job market for trained dental hygienists and dental assistants. And similar career possibilities exist for paralegals, who assist attorneys in their profession."

"Adding these programs will provide well-trained people for jobs in those professions," Richardson added. "And after all, that is a key part of our total mission."

SCC Not Left Out Of Recent Budget Cuts

The Mount Airy News Tuesday, March 6, 1990

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Surry Community College has not been left out of recent budget cuts being made by state officials at universities and colleges across North Carolina.

In fact, the college has been hit with a 3 percent cutback of $210,000 from its $7 million annual budget since the state announced that its revenues were insufficient for its expenditures, according to SCC President Dr. Swanson Richards.

The cutback has required the elimination of some smaller courses at the college and a decrease in the use of supplies and travel expenses, Richards said. But he explained that the college was expecting the cutback and began implementing its own reductions in the winter quarter.

"We anticipated this with the picture of the revenue and made some adjustments in the winter quarter and now in the spring quarter. Along with adjustments that will be made in June, we have been able to spread this cutback out over two quarters and in June," he said.

Last month, state budget officials said North Carolina revenues could be $170 million less this year than originally projected. In addition, the state has been hit with another $50 million in unexpected Hurricane Hugo relief and teacher pay funding.

State officials are blaming the sluggish corporate performances in the wake of huge buyouts and mergers for the decrease in revenues. And individual and sales tax collections are down, all of which is not producing the revenues projected when the state budget was approved last year.

Richards explained that the 3 percent cutback does not mean the college will lose $210,000 from its budget. He said that money will be left in the budget but will not be approved by the state to be spent.

"They are just not certifying our funds because their funds are not there. And we have to have a balanced budget," the college official said.

The classes that have been eliminated because of the cutback were smaller classes from various departments that were not as needed as other courses. "We just took a few classes across the board in a variety of areas that in the past have had a small attendance.

"But I don't think we see any drastic effect at all on us. We are still operating primarily as usual. We are in pretty good shape. But when you plan for something and you don't get it, you may be eating potatoes when you were planning on a steak," Richards said.

Talking to the Surry County commissioners about the cutbacks Monday, Richards said he did not know what to expect for the future. "If the revenue picture gets worse, we may have to cut back some more. If not, we are OK," he said.

Funding Request Made For Expansion

After discussing the present cutbacks, Richards also talked to the county commissioners about future plans for a $3.5 million expansion project that would include four new college programs and another building on the Dobson campus.

At the request of the SCC Board of Trustees, Richards asked the commissioners to consider allocating $1 million toward the project. He said the college would be requesting $2.5 million in state funds for the effort.

The project includes offering instruction in the paralegal, Licensed Practical Nursing (LPN), dental hygienist and child-care worker fields. College officials have determined that additional space will be needed on campus if the programs are approved.

In his request, Richards asked the commissioners to give the college some indication that the county does have funds to allocate for the project. He said although there is no timeline for it, getting an indication of county funding will help SCC seek state financing, which usually requires a local match.

"We ask that as we look to the future and you all look to the future of Surry County, that you take into consideration Surry Community College's needs as you look at the needs of the court system, county office and public schools," Richards stated.

County officials have begun discussing a possible bond referendum being held as a way of financing school building needs throughout Surry County. Two referendums have been held in the past to finance needs at the college and county officials can include SCC in the referendum being discussed if they choose.

State Official To Visit SCC

The Mount Airy News Sunday, March 11, 1990

"The General Assembly of North Carolina hereby declares that the policy of the State is to ensure every child a fair and full opportunity to reach his full potential and that no child ... shall be excluded from service or education for any reason whatsoever."

The opening paragraph is from the North Carolina Constitution. However, some in state government believe that one group of Tar Heel children is not receiving the full benefit of these words.

One of those is Peggy Wilson. Wilson, a member of the House of Representatives from Rockingham County, will be speaking Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Surry Community College teaching auditorium.

Wilson is to discuss House Bill 1281 & 1282, which proposes to clarify handicapped teaching needs. The bill targets problems relating to the allocation of money for teaching and teaching assistant positions for handicapped and special education children.

It also notes how money could be saved in some areas and distributed to others who need it, and proposes solutions to such problems by playing fair and equal with children involved in both regular and special education programs.

The old saying, "Home is where the heart is," would mean that Jim Reeves' home would be a lot of places.

His house in Mount Airy which he shares with his wife; the campus of Surry Community College in Dobson, where he has worked since 1966; his old stomping grounds in Flat Rock, where he grew up; and the house of the Lord, where he has learned the fruits of the spirit — these are just a few of the places one will find where Jim Reeves' heart has found a home.

With a doctorate degree in administration and years of work experience, Reeves has had ample opportunities to get a high-status job. And with 24 years' service for the state, he soon will be eligible to retire. But Reeves says he is not planning on making changes at this time in his life because he is happy.

The college administrator has a job that he loves, a family he wouldn't take anything in exchange for and a church that he is active with. He was born and raised in Surry County and believes that he is making a difference in his community. So why make changes when one is happy?

"I love the college and what it is doing and accomplishing. I have two daughters who married local people, another daughter and a new grandson. I am a family man and one that would want to stay in Surry County. I have had opportunities in other places, but this is all a higher priority for me," Reeves said during a recent interview, summing up most of his happiness in one statement.

Although Reeves was born in the Holly Springs community of Surry, his family of four moved to Flat Rock when he was 3. It was there that Reeves spent his childhood, until graduating from Flat Rock High School.

Reeves' family was small, made up of he and his sister and parents. He said his mother spent most of her life working in textile mills, mostly Renfro, while his father was employed by the county school system as a bus mechanic and later as a mechanic for the state Highway Commission.

Two things come to Reeves' mind when asked about his childhood — the church and a soapbox derby in which he raced. But one common point among these two things is that his family was involved in both.

"The church was a big influence on my childhood. My parents really believed in the teaching of the Bible. Dad was real active in Flat Rock Baptist Church and we did a lot with the church. We were very family oriented. My parents were real interested in us and that we do what was right," the 51-year-old Surry Countian said.

In addition to his church life as a child, Reeves vividly remembers the soapbox derby program that was started in Mount Airy when he was 12. "It was a big event for two or three years. They were really big to us and it was really a family affair. Everyone was behind it."

When he was 15, Reeves competed in a derby held in Winston-Salem. Out of 127 contestants, he won first place and a fully paid trip to Akron, Ohio, to compete in the national soapbox derby. That resulted in his first ride on an airplane, Reeves recalled, not mentioning how he placed in the national competition.

Reeves' discussion on his family led him to reveal that his mother has been the most influential figure in his life. Still living, his mother represents the kind of person Reeves said he has always wanted to be. "She inspired me to treat people the way I would have them treat me. She is a person who doesn't ever exhibit any kind of anger and treats everyone with kindness and respect. And she makes friends easy.

"All of those things are real admirable, especially to have an abundance of those things. You know how they say a boy will marry a girl like his mother? I think I did that," he continued.

Reeves was referring to his wife Gayle, whom he met in Winston-Salem. After having their third child, Mrs. Reeves attended Surry Community College, received a four-year teaching degree and now instructs special-education students at Jones Elementary School.

"I have a lot of admiration for her. She has a lot of patience with these kids and a lot of care and great desire to see them learn. That is real hard and she has been a big supporter," said Reeves.

Mrs. Reeves showed her support for her husband shortly after their first daughter was 7 weeks old and the family packed up and moved to Boone so Reeves could get his master's degree in counseling. He had found a $200-a-month teaching assistant job at Boone High School and his wife got a job to provide the additional income needed on which to live while he finished school.

Their move to Boone followed Reeves' short teaching career in Surry County. A business major at Appalachian State Teachers College, Reeves returned to Surry and worked six months as a teacher's aide at North Surry High School and mixed coaching and teaching business for one year at Mount Airy High.

Combining sports and business was nothing unusual for the man who first wanted to be a physical education teacher. The desire to become involved in scholastic sports instruction stemmed from a high school career in athletics. And the desire to teach only hit Reeves when he served two years in the Air Force in North Africa.

"Being in the service really gave me a chance to go away from home and do a lot of thinking and growing up some at that early age. I think I developed an interest in learning and finding out things when I was in the service," he explained.

But college did not teach Reeves everything, as he still remembers the first lesson in discipline that he received from H.M. Finch, a former principal at Mount Airy High School. "I remember my first day teaching there and can still see Mr. Finch coming down that long hallway.

"He said, 'What I want you to do when you are teaching here is discipline these students 90 percent of the time and teach them the other 10 percent of the time. You can't teach anybody unless you get their attention.' He had good order and good discipline in our school and I will always remember him coming to my room and telling me that my first day," Reeves recalled.

"I really believe in that philosophy in that I don't think you can get a point across unless you have their attention."

Reeves used some of that philosophy when he worked at Campbell University as a counselor after receiving his master's degree. But Reeves wanted to return to Surry County, specifically to work for the local community college.

"Surry Community College had just been approved to be in existence then. Every time I would come home, I would go by and see about getting a job there. That was when they were just beginning to lay the foundation for the first three buildings and the office was in downtown Dobson. And one time when I came home, they did have a job and offered it to me."

Reeves added that he was ecstatic and rushed back to Campbell University to tell the dean he was resigning. "I told him I was going to Surry Community College and he almost fell in his tracks. He couldn't believe I was leaving Campbell to go to an unestablished college," Reeves said.

Family sends 7 members through SCC

DOBSON — Pursuit of education is a tradition in the Midkiff family of Mount Airy.

Much of that has manifested itself at Surry Community College. Seven members of the family have attended SCC, and others are shaping plans for the SCC experience.

James Powell Midkiff, a native of Mount Airy, graduated in 1976 and 1977, receiving diplomas in both electrical and machinist programs. Prior to that he had served 20 years with the Navy, and after his SCC graduation he worked with Westinghouse in Winston-Salem before retiring.

Daughter Debra Midkiff Stoltz received her degree at SCC in Accounting in 1983, and is now a greige production scheduler at Renfro Industries. Husband Tony is employed with Westinghouse.

Kathy Midkiff Goins earned her Nursing degree at SCC in 1985, and since that time has advanced to staff charge nurse at Northern Surry Hospital. She was honor graduate in her class at SCC with a 3.4 grade point average. She has four children. Michael was born six days before her first day of class. Now six, he is still called "little professor" by members of the family, since he attended some classes with his mother. Her husband Doug is head dispatcher with R.W. Joyce Trucking.

Donna Midkiff Nichols will graduate in Computer Programming in May. A single parent with four children (ages 17, 15, 7 and 5), she also works at Belk in Mount Airy. There are 18 years between her high school and college studies.

Her daughter Heather will graduate at Mount Airy High and plans to enter SCC in the Fall 1991, to work toward a degree in Education.

Anita Midkiff Van Fleet served over three years with the Navy and attended SCC under the GI Bill. She will graduate in Drafting. Husband Mike is a local contractor.

Kim Midkiff Brown earned her GED (high school equivalency) at SCC and has also taken courses in furniture finishing. She has signed up for classes starting this spring in Nurse's Aide work.

Tiffiany, the youngest daugther, is a student at North Surry High School and a possible SCC recurit.

The one son of the family, James Robert, did not attend SCC, but has done very well indeed nevertheless. He will graduate in June from the United States Naval Academy. He is a graduate of North Surry High School.

Donna reflects on the family's tradition of education: She says her four children have been a "tower of strength" to her. "They say, 'gosh, Mom, you have more homework than we do,' and that makes it easier." She credits her deceased mother (Hassie Hawks Midkiff) with keeping the desire for learning alive in the family.

SCC Foundation Lands Largest Donation

News Staff Report

DOBSON — The Surry Community College Foundation has received its largest single donation since the foundation was established in 1966.

Robert and Esther Lovill of Mount Airy have established a fund with the Surry Community College Foundation. The Lovill gift of more than $50,000 will be invested through the foundation and used to finance scholarships and other needs the college might have.

SCC President Dr. Swanson Richards, stating that the $50,000 donation is the largest single one in foundation history, said, "I can think of no better way to underscore support of good education than what the Lovills have done in this instance."

Noting that the Lovill family has a tradition of entrepreneurship and business enterprise in Surry County, Richards said, "Their generosity is evidence of the family's desire to help others where a need exists."

> "I can think of no better way to underscore support of good education than what the Lovills have done in this instance."
> —Dr. Swanson Richards

Recipients of scholarships funded through the donation will be selected through the foundation. The Lovills have said that they would like children of families for whom their firm, Town and Country Realty, has built homes over the years to be considered for the awards.

Lovill is the founder of Town and Country Realty, which is now owned by his son, Robert Lovill III. He is also an attorney with a law degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His father was a distinguished physician in the community for many years and his brothers were in business and farm enterprises.

Richards indicated that the Lovills also have invited other individuals, clubs and businesses wishing to support the foundation to channel gifts through the Lovill Fund. Scholarship recipients also will be encouraged to support the foundation.

The Surry Community College Foundation was established in 1966 under the guidance of the college board of trustees as a nonprofit organization because of a need to raise supplemental finances for the school.

The board of directors of the foundation is comprised of local professional persons as well as individuals from business and industry.

Several college-related community activities are not provided funds from governmental agencies. The Surry Community College Foundation is the only source of funding for college use other than federal, state or local public monies. Additional funds are needed by the foundation to provide scholarships and assistance to students.

Decidedly, Clyde Johnson is a man who finds value in things many people overlook. He will retire as vice president of administrative services on Tuesday, July 31. And as his retirement date draws closer, no doubt his thoughts turn toward the more intrinsic qualities of the Surry Community College campus. And its history.

Before coming to Dobson, Johnson had taught mathematics at Chatham Central High School. Likewise, Robert Chilton worked as associate superintendent in Chatham County before becoming superintendent of schools in Surry County. In the 1960s, Chilton accepted the job as academic dean of SCC. Johnson knew the time was right to make a career change as well.

"I was looking for a change, and I thought enough of Mr. Chilton to figure that any place he worked and lived would be a good place to be. So I applied here and was employed," Johnson said.

When he arrived at SCC in 1966, building construction was anything but complete. "I taught mathematics the first year I was here. And since the buildings were not completed, we held classes in Surry Central High School. We started class at about 4 p.m. and got out at about 10 p.m. Then after I taught for a year, the president offered me a job as business manager — which, I thought, would blend my interests. I've always enjoyed teaching and being around young people. And with my accounting background, it was natural that the two would work quite well for me."

Surry Community College has an interesting campus. But its history is no less lively. During the early days, everything was a new experience for administrators, faculty and students. The campus grounds were no exception, as the first three buildings — the administrative, science technology and the shop buildings — were no higher than ground-level in 1966. They were first occupied in May 1967.

"I feel very fortunate to have been able to work as a team that helped develop this campus," he said proudly. "I leave with some sadness because as I walk around the campus, I can remember the circumstances about the campus. Even when we were working under very hard pressures, we always liked to include a little humor. In fact, we always had some practical jokers on the staff."

Nearly 20 years ago, a faculty member bought a new car. As many new car owners do, he recorded his gas mileage and then bragged about it. In due time, the mileage seemed much improved — well above and beyond factory specifications. Unreal. Johnson explained that unbeknownst to the faculty member, his co-workers had been fueling the new car. No wonder the car seemed a glittering prize.

"When they stopped putting gas in the car, this reduced his mileage tremendously. And we heard that he took his car to almost every gas station in town to find out what was wrong with his new car. We didn't take any gas out of his car. But the mileage still seemed to go down tremendously. Gas was real cheap to buy. And we could afford to play this trick," he said with a smile.

Thinking back on the early days, Johnson recalled a female student from Dobson who used a horse as her mode of transportation. Tacked onto that, she insisted on leaving the horse close to the building when she attended classes. The administration wanted her to park the animal farther away.

Aside from wishing to leave areas clear for emergency engines in case of fire, there was another obvious rub in dealing with this touchy situation: "The horse left his evidence wherever he went. Horses have a way of depositing manure once they're left alone.

"We told her it was absolutely necessary that she park the horse at a greater distance from the building. She had no choice in the matter," he recalled.

Johnson likes history. Even his literary preference contains a historic perspective. He said he enjoys anything by James A. Michener. "Centennial" certainly ranks high on his list of important, enormously entertaining novels. "I think I can discern the history from the fiction fairly well."

In the novel, the characters and scenes are fictitious. But some background characters and incidents are real. For example, there really was a drought between 1931 and 1935. And Jennie Jerome, mother of Winston Churchill, used to frequent the English ranches near Cheyenne. Charles Goodnight really was one of the legends of the old west who hauled his dead partner's body home in a lead box.

"I like Michener's style of writing and the way he deals with social issues. I think few of his movies do justice to his books. It's hard to condense without leaving out a lot of quality," he said.

Johnson sees value in collectibles, things most people would overlook. He defined collectibles as items that are collected, yet are not valuable enough to be called antiques. This is a fairly new hobby for Johnson. He still has a lot farther to go. And a lot more to learn, he said.

"I like to collect political badges and other items. I have items of all the presidents when they were candidates back through President Roosevelt, I believe. I still don't have Harry S. Truman. I get them from flea markets, auctions, sales, different places. I'm trying to get all the presidential candidates. And I have others that I just happened to bump into accidentally."

Johnson said his retirement plans are fairly nonexistent. If he made plans now, then he would feel obligated to fulfill them later. Judging from his personal investment strategy, his retirement nest is nicely feathered — he practices what he preaches.

"As for my personal investments, I follow much the same very conservative proceedure the SCC directors have decided — mostly CDs," he said. "I hope I have given some suggestions that the foundation has considered."

The Surry Community College estabied a foundation, which is a non-profit organization. Primarily, this separate body makes investments to provide student scholarships. Although the foundation is a separate body, there is a kinship in some cases. For example, some directors are also SCC board of trustee members. The foundation consists of 12 members, an increase from 10 members that was the total until about four years ago, Johnson said.

Recently, the endowment's total value was estimated at more than $500,000. This money will be reinvested, while the interest earned will fund scholarships. Currently, the school offers no chaired-professorship. But Johnson said that that is still in the planning stage. A chaired professorship is a method of providing enough money to hire a professor onto the campus and the salary will come directly from interest earned from a portion of the endowment stated specifically for the professorship.

"Our bylaws spell out that we are to place the money in non-speculative investments. So we do not play the stock market, or things of that nature."

Johnson's office conducts bookkeeping for SCC. "My responsibility is mainly to keep the records. We leave the direction up to the board of trustees. So I can't take any credit with their policies or procedures. I see my job as mainly supervising the records. And I've had some real good assistance in doing that.

"I'm real proud of our records. We would rather be conservative and depend on our 8 to 10-percent, than to gamble and maybe lose what other people have contributed to us.

The Foundation invests through the state of N.C., which pays slightly higher rates than would be available from bank CDs and other instruments. The state offers this service to all state-operated organization.

Johnson seemed well-adapted to financial records. During his enrollment at Elon College as an undergraduate, Johnson found employment as an accountant. He said his most unusual job was bookkeeper of a junkyard in Siler City. "The junkyard was like "Sanford and Son." But on a much larger scale. This fellow sent much of his stuff on a railroad freight car. He bought scrap metal and iron. Back in those days, there was a great demand for the bodies of old cars, and things like that."

Johnson majored in mathematics and minored in accounting because he enjoyed it. He has no artistic expertise. But his daughter is a music teacher in Siler City.

Her life is the reverse from Johnson and his wife's. The parents grew up in Siler City and moved to Surry County. On the other hand, their daughter grew up in Surry County and moved to Siler City after graduation from UNC-Greensboro in 1980 with a Master's degree. At the time, teaching positions were hard to find. She applied to a few schools and was lucky to find an opening where some family still reside. Johnson's sister is a Siler City resident.

The biggest difference in teaching high school and teaching college is that in high school, students are there because they have to be there. Whereas in college, students are there because they want to be there. That was especially true in Johnson's experiences with the SCC student body. "I have always enjoyed my association with the young people. Unfortunately, in the job I have now I missed the student contact. But I've certainly enjoyed my limited contact. You don't wonder where you stand with young people. When you talk with them, you can easily tell."

Crawford To Head Stanly College

News Staff Report

DOBSON — A former member of the Surry Community College administrative staff has been tapped to head another community college while a second member has announced his retirement.

Dr. Jan Crawford, 46, former vice president of instruction, was named as president of Stanly Community College in Albemarle, effective July 1. Crawford had served as interim president since November.

He succeeds Charles Byrd, who resigned in September.

Crawford said Tuesday that the SCC Board of Trustees granted him a leave of absence when he took over the helm of the Stanly County campus in November. He opted to apply for the job on a permanent basis and was selected in April by the Stanly Community College Board of Trustees.

Crawford noted that the Stanly campus has an enrollment between 1,200 and 1,400 students and offers college transfer courses through the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

The campus was founded in 1973, making it one of the youngest of North Carolina's community colleges, he noted.

Crawford served at Surry Community College for five years and resided in Mount Airy during that time. He was active in the Surry County Chapter of the American Red Cross and served on its Board of Directors for four years. He was a member of Mount Airy's First Presbyterian Church and served as a deacon.

Crawford also served as chairman of the Surry County Board of Elections and was a charter member of the Surry County Committee of 100.

Johnson Retires

Meanwhile, H. Clyde Johnson, vice president for administrative services, announced his retirement, effective July 31, after 24 years of service.

Johnson, a native of Siler City, joined the staff in July, 1966 as a teacher and book store manager. In 1967, he was named business manager and, in 1984, appointed as a vice president.

His duties in that capacity included overseeing the business office, building and grounds maintenance, snack bar and bookstore.

He served two years on a submarine tender with the U.S. Navy and earned his bachelor's degree in mathematics with a minor in accounting from Elon College. He received his master's degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Johnson plans to pursue various hobbies. He and his wife, Treva, reside in Dobson and enjoy antiquing, gardening, fishing and "puttering." They are active in Dobson Baptist Church where he is a Sunday School teacher and a trustee. He also served on the Dobson Zoning Board for six years.

Tuition Rates At SCC Are On The Increase

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Tuition rates at Surry Community College are increasing due to action taken this summer by North Carolina legislators.

During the short session of the N.C. General Assembly, lawmakers imposed or raised dozens of fees to help make up a $336.4 million revenue shortfall in the 1990-91 budget. New or higher fees will affect students among other people, including barbers, restaurant operators, psychologists, dam builders and operators of nuclear power plants.

Surry Community College is joining all the community colleges in the state in having to hike fees. The fee increases range from $15 for full-time students from North Carolina to $141 for full-time out-of-state students.

Students registering for the fall semester at the community college in Dobson Aug. 30 will face these permanent tuition increases: from $90 to $105 for full-time, in-state students; from $840 to $981 for full-time, out-of-state students; from $7.50 to $8.75 per credit hour for part-time, in-state students; and from $70 to $81.75 per credit hour for part-time, out-of-state students.

However, the increased tuition costs are not expected to affect the college's enrollment numbers. "Hopefully, we don't expect it to hurt too badly since the in-state increase was not that great," said Clyde Johnson, who retired last week as vice president of administrative services at Surry Community College.

"Anytime you have an increase, you will have a little effect, but we are not expecting a big effect from this," he added.

Johnson noted that the $141 increase for out-of-state students is not expected to make a tremendous difference in enrollment, either.

One thing that will help with out-of-state tuition is a new law passed last year which allows out-of-state students to attend the college at in-state rates if they work for a North Carolina employer who will pay tuition for them. "This has been a big help," Johnson said.

He said that various forms of financial aid are available if the tuition increases create a hardship on anyone.

University students are being affected by the fee increase as well. Full-time, in-state university students will pay a $41.50 tuition surcharge this year and out-of-state students, an $83 surcharge.

Several other new or increased fees were approved by lawmakers, drawing some complaints. Rep. David Diamont of Pilot Mountain told his colleagues in Raleigh, "You may want to campaign on the fact that you didn't raise taxes, but you sure as heck raised fees on a lot of people."

Tuition and Fees Increase At Surry Comm. College

Students attending Surry Community College this fall can expect to dig deeper into their summer earnings. According to state sources, the General Assembly recently approved a tuition increase for the North Carolina Community College System.

Surry Community College (SCC), one of 58 community colleges in the state system, will be affected by the increase. The rise in tuition is due to an effort to increase funding for the community colleges.

Effective fall 1990, full-time tuition for North Carolina residents will rise from $90 to $105 per quarter. Tuition for full-time, out-of-state students will increase from $840 to $981 per quarter.

Credit-hour rates will increase from $7.50 to $8.75 per credit hour for in-state students. Out-of state students will pay $81.75 per credit hour, up from the current $70.

These new rates apply to classes in curriculum, or degree-granting programs. Fees for occupational extension courses will increase from $15 to $25 per course. Literacy/basic skills classes for adults will continue to be offered free of charge.

Tuition at the state's public universities was also raised by the General Assembly.

"We are concerned about any increase in tuition and its effects on our students," says Community College System President Robert W. Scott. "We realize that the state is in the midst of a budget shortfall, so a tuition increase was one of the few options for increased funding.

"But we don't want this increase to keep our citizens out of school. All of our colleges are committed to helping students find scholarships or other forms of financial aid. I encourage citizens to ask about financial aid options."

Scott says that the state's businesses and industries are being very supportive of scholarship programs for community college students.

At the state level, nine major contributors have given funds to this effort. This is in addition to the thousands of businesses, industries, associations and individuals across the state which contribute scholarships directly to their local colleges.

Last week, nine Mount Airy hosiery manufacturing firms joined forces to create a Hosiery Employees Scholarship Fund for studies at SCC.

Scholarship recipients will be students whose parents are employed by the participating hosiery companies: Adams-Millis, B & J Hosiery, Ballston Knitting, Brown-Wooten Mills, Eco-

Knit, Kentucky Derby Hosiery, Lynne Hosiery Mills, Renfro Corporation, and Smart Tops.

The scholarship fund will be based on a one-dollar contribution by the companies for each employee of these nine firms. Each scholarship will be up to $450 per year. Student recipients will be selected by the Surry Community College Financial Aid Committee, based on need and continued academic progress.

$2,500 gift donated to fund special projects

DOBSON — An anonymous donor has made a challenge gift of $2,500 to Surry Community College to form an endowment that would help fund special projects which are not covered by allocations by state and local governments, and in addition to scholarships provided by the SCC Foundation.

The challenge gift is announced by P.M. Sharpe, Mount Airy attorney and chairman of the SCC Foundation Board of Directors. Sharpe said the special fund would be above and beyond the regular unrestricted giving to the Foundation.

"We urge everyone to continue their support of traditional scholarships and other financial aid for students who have needs or who have excelled scholastically."

He added that the new fund will be used for special projects, citing as an example the current statewide effort in which former governments and Governor Martin have joined other state leaders in a program to broaden public understanding and support of the community college system.

Community colleges throughout the state have been asked to support the program financially, but such support will have to be outside regular state and local government funding.

Other projects could include community college salary supplements or other incentives to ensure continued excellence in the system.

"Donors to the special fund can be assured of proper use of these monies," said SCC President Swanson Richards. The fund will be administered by the college's business manager and director of accounting services.

Sharpe said the special effort will extend through June 1991, after which it will be reviewed and possibly continued.

'And Jupiter Aligns With Mars'

Astronomy Buffs Enjoy Getting A Closer Look At The Stars

By M.C. DAVIS
News Staff Writer

"When the moon is in the seventh house
And Jupiter aligns with Mars,
Then peace will guide the planet
And love will steer the stars."

What on Earth were they talking about?

"Astronomy and astrology, in the great past, were related," Rick Blakley said with a slight note of disdain in his voice. Blakley is the president of the Forsyth Astronomical Society. The club held an observation Saturday, Sept. 22, at Pilot Mountain State Park, where the "seeing" is better.

"The two disciplines have split entirely because astronomers consider astrology more hocus-pocus than science.

"Anyway, what they're talking about," Blakley continued, "is the fact that our solar system — which contains the sun, the planets and all the moons — forms a band. The solar system is tilted in respect to The Milky Way. And we note the seasons of the year according to official points. The vernal equinox occurs about March 21, and the autumnal equinox occurs about Sept. 22.

"Right now, the vernal equinox is in the constellation Aries. I don't mean just for this month," Blakley explained. "I mean this era; this epoch. Each year, that point shifts a little bit because the whole solar system changes a little over the eons in respect to each other. After the year 2000, that point of the vernal equinox will slip into the constellation Aquarius. I don't know exactly when that will happen. But the solar system is headed that way."

Further, Blakley said that Jupiter aligns with Mars through the century at various times — no news to report there.

Does Blakley believe that the vernal equinox slipping into the constellation Aquarius will mark the third millennium (the period of a thousand years when some believe, according to Revelations 20:1—5, a period of peace and happiness will prevail)?

"No, I don't believe that," he snorted. "But a lot of astrologers will sure be interested."

Dwight Atkins is a math instructor at Surry Community College. Though not a member of the Forsyth Astronomical Society, he was willing to share some of his own ideas about the stars. Atkins said superstition and myth have always been used to explain the unknown. Naturally, astronomy would be connected with the occult.

"This is from a math teacher's perspective: Astrology is to astronomy what numerology is to the number theory. For example, one aspect of numerology might be that 13 is an unlucky number, whereas the number theory is a bona fide branch of mathematics. It is not based on postulations (that which is assumed to be true without proof). It is based on theorems (that which can be proven from accepted premises and thus is established as law, or principle)," Atkins said.

"The same thing here — astronomy is a science, with different aspects of it arrived at from experimentation and theory, whereas astrology is really wrapped up in mysticism.

"I guess the bottom line is: If you believe that 13 is an unlucky number, then you'll want to gear your beliefs along those ways. And if you're a Leo, then you'd better make sure the other person is of the right Zodiac sign before you get with them," Atkins reasoned.

About 40 people arrived at the parking lot of Pilot Mountain State Park on the recent Saturday to witness what the skies had to offer. Typically, the club announces sightings outside of Winston-Salem, where the light pollution from streetlights and so on is less severe, making for better night viewing. Also, the autumn season provides better "seeing" because there is more rainfall, which clears the atmosphere to present a crisper view of heavenly bodies.

Blakley advised that constellations are but rough representations of the images their names imply they are shaped as. Therefore, star-watching requires lots of imagination from the viewers. But the names serve as useful learning tools to chart the heavens.

"I think it's important for Americans to remember that a lot of what we know about astronomy and mathematics came to us through the Arabic culture. In general, we tend to think of the Arab world as something to be ignored. But there was a time when they were among the greatest countries in the world," Blakley said.

The stellar names are deeply shrouded in interesting Arabic, Greek and Roman cultures. It is not uncommon to find that some constellations have more than one name, as they may have been discovered by different countries at roughly the same time.

"Berenices was a queen of one of the early kingdoms of Africa," Blakley detailed. "She pledged to a priest that if her husband came back from war alive, then she would cut off her hair. She was supposed to have very beautiful hair. Perhaps she only really cut off a small portion of hair."

Blakley added, "When her husband returned, Berenices left a donation of some curls from her hair in the temple. The next day, the curls were gone. The incident was blown up by the priests, who said that the gods honored her by placing her hair in the sky. And they decided to commemorate her splendid gesture by naming one of the constellations 'Coma Berenices,' which means 'Hair of Berenices.' "

Other sites frequented by the Forsyth Astronomical Society include the Blue Ridge Parkway and Jefferson National Forest in Virginia. Blakley has established communication ties with rangers operating Stone Mountain State Park for a future outing there.

"We're going back to the Blue Ridge Parkway on Dec. 15. In order to avoid the city lights of Winston-Salem, we normally have to drive about 45 minutes away. And even then," he said, "the skies — which are better than they are in Winston-Salem — are not as good as they could be."

To illustrate that point, Blakley said that from atop Pilot Mountain, one could easily see objects all the way to the parking lot, and beyond. It became clear that Blakley likes darkness.

"We like areas that are so dark you couldn't see your hand in front of your face. And we would very much like to have more members from Surry County. In fact, we're looking for some property now to construct an observatory. And if we could get more people from the outer areas who might know of dark-sky sites, that would help us a great deal," he said.

"We would be willing to go so far as to make the institution serve the local area. There's no particular need in trying to make the observatory exclusively for Forsyth County residents. That would be ridiculous."

Blakley said membership in the 53-year-old hobby club varies. But he estimated that two current members are Surry residents: One lives in Pilot Mountain and the other in Mount Airy.

Stephen Brooker of Mount Airy said he is a new member of the Forsyth Astronomical Society. "When we get together for star searches, we call them 'star parties,' " Brooker said. "We meet at isolated places to study the constellations. We try to avoid as much light pollution as we can at the sites. Even in Mount Airy, there's a big dome of light over the city."

Brooker attributed his fascination with astronomy to his interest in science fiction. "It all fits together. And there are astronomy magazines that list companies that sell telescopes. Some telescopes go for as much as $15,000. You can really get into astronomy."

The club attracts people of many businesses and professions. But engineers and physicians comprise the bulk of this entourage. Blakley operates his own drafting company, so designing telescopes was a prime motivator for him.

"And it's easy to see why engineers like astronomy: Engineers like to build nice things. They also would be interested in making their own telescope. By the way," Blakley added, "you don't have to go out and buy your own telescope. They're relatively simple to design. And there are books of instruction on how to build one."

Said Atkins, "My advice for anybody wanting to get into astronomy would be to maybe get a good pair of binoculars with a 50mm objective lens. Also, they may want to get one of those star charts that are available, where you could actually dial the date and the time that they are looking at the sky. These allow viewers to hold the chart over their head, so they can match the stars with the ones on the chart. It's a good way to start identifying the constellations and the stars. There's a lot you can learn about astronomy with just a pair of binoculars."

Atkins said the arrival of Halley's Comet in the fall of 1985 was disappointing. Unfortunately, he had made a presentation to faculty and staff of SCC about what to expect. "The buildup, from everything I had read, was that we would be able to see the comet well," he recalled. "And we had all these people viewing it with pairs of binoculars. And I think some people expected to see something flashing across the sky. But, na: It was just a fuzzy patch of a thing that kind of stuck there."

Such are the ways of science. They can be cruel. They can be kind. But at least the ways of science take a stab at being logical in divining the future. Or, to quote from Sir Edmund Halley: "In the summer of the year 1456, a comet was seen which passed in a retrograde direction between the earth and the sun. From its period and path, I infer that it was the same comet as that of the years 1531, 1607 and 1682. I may, therefore, with confidence, predict its return in the year 1758."

Registered nurses graduate from SCC

DOBSON — Nursing graduates of Surry Community College's class of 1990 scored a perfect 100 percent passage rate in taking the Registered Nursing examination administered by the State Board of Nursing.

The 34 nurses, from seven different counties in Northwest North Carolina and lower Virginia, average 32 years of age, ranging from 20 to 47 years. Seven are former LPN's (licensed practical nurses) who studied for RN status in SCC evening courses while holding down full-time jobs.

Beverly Essick, Chairman of the SCC Health Services Division, said, "This is an exceptional class, whose performance . . . reflects favorably on the college. This is especially gratifying, since we won state approval to expand our nursing program last year." Seventy students were admitted to the program this year, compared to 35 last year. "We still have a waiting list, but this has given us the capability to better serve the need for skilled nurses," Mr. Essick said.

All of the 34 RN graduates have already accepted positions with health-care facilities in this region, she added.

New Nursing Program Approved At Surry Community College

October 10, 1990, The Enterprise, Page

A new Licensed Practical Nursing (LPN) program has been approved by state authorities for Surry Community College. The LPN courses will begin November 26, with a November 2 deadline for admission.

Dr. Swanson Richards, SCC President, noted that "we appreciate the confidence extended to SCC by the State Department of Community Colleges and the State Board of Nursing by approving this program. It will complement our already successful RN program and will do much to alleviate the serious shortage of well-trained health-care personnel."

The new SCC program will consist of five quarters of concentrated studies, including both classroom and clinical experiences. The college works with Northern Hospital of Surry County, Hugh Chatham Memorial Hospital in Elkin, and N.C. Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem to provide clinical training.

"There's no question about the job market for LPN's," Mrs. Essick said.

The LPN program will be administered by the Health Services Division headed by Mrs. Beverly Essick. Classes will be on a full-time day schedule. Those interested should contact Student Services to inquire about admission procedures.

The college recently surveyed 14 area health-care facilities including hospitals, convalescent care centers and nursing homes about needs for LPN's. Response indicated that 44 LPN vacancies existed in their staffs.

All of SCC's 1990 RN graduates passed the examination administered by the State Nursing Board, and all are employed with regional health-care facilities.

SCC recently introduced another new program, Paralegal studies, which began in the fall quarter to train people for service in law offices and various court systems. The fall class is filled but will be repeated in the winter quarter. The college has worked closely with the Surry County Bar Association to develop the curriculum. David Beal is the instructor.

Husband and wife nursing team at SCC

DOBSON — "Through thick and thin," the vaudeville song goes, "we're always in this together."

Tracy and Amanda Kinder of Mount Airy can identify with that.

They are the first husband-and-wife team enrolled in the Nursing Program at Surry Community College.

They are one of the few North Carolina married couples who serve in the Armed Forces Reserves, in this instance the U.S. Navy.

They both are in the same reserve unit—Naval Hospital 207 at Camp Lejeune. Both do their training at Greensboro.

A few weeks ago, they were shaken by a call that put them both on alert to report for active duty, in response to the Mid-East crisis.

Both hope they don't have to go, but are realistic in saying that this was a possibility they recognized when they joined the Reserves in November, 1989.

If they were to be assigned to Mid-East duty, it would be a repeat performace for Tracy. A Mount Airy native (parents are Ernest and Cora Kinder), he graduated from Mount Airy High, served with Surry County Emergency Medical Services (EMS) for seven years as a paramedic and then joined the American Corporation, a private firm that manages military hospitals in the Mid-East. He served at Jeddah, Saudi Arabia for three years, 1983-86.

Amanda grew up in Miami, Fla., and attended the Miami Dade Community College before moving to Mount Airy with her parents, Don and Geri Pruett.

At Miami Dade she studied respiratory therapy and after moving to this region she worked 2 ½ years with the Alleghany Emergency Medical Service in Sparta.

The two met at an antique sale in White Plains and were married in 1989. They began pre-nursing studies at SCC in the Spring of 1989 and are now full-time students in the Nursing Program, with expectations of graduating in May, 1992.

She wants to pursue a nursing career in rehabilitation, orthopedics, or perhaps plastic surgery. "But unfortunately, there's no training facilities in plastic surgery nearby," she says.

Harking back to his days as paramedic with the Surry EMS, Tracy says he's inclined toward a career in emergency room and critical care. He holds the rank of Petty Officer 3, and Amanda is a Corpsman in the Naval Reserve Unit.

Invest; fund our community colleges

By: DR. SWANSON RICHARDS
President, Surry Community College

North Carolina's dynamic economic progress during the last quarter century has been tied closely to the state's innovative system of strong community colleges. Envied and in some cases copied by other states, the system of 58 community colleges has provided the necessary job skills for an expanding and changing industrial workforce.

In many cases, community colleges were the deciding factor when major companies considered coming to North Carolina and have been helpful to other companies located in the state when they decided to expand.

Economics aside, community colleges have made the difference in the lives of millions of North Carolinians, opening doors of opportunity at every level and in virtually every city and town in the state.

North Carolina's community colleges are substantially underfunded. The state is facing a major fiscal decision as expected revenues fail to meet the appropriated budget. The question arises, "Will North Carolina be able to stay competitive in a global economy that places emphasis on higher levels of mechanization and additional skills for the work force?"

Our people in North Carolina must face this question in the coming months. Additional demands are being placed on community colleges to provide classes and training for businesses and industry at a time of budget restrictions. We in the community college system must be capable of responding in a positive way.

North Carolinians for Community Colleges—chaired by former governors Terry Sanford, Bob Scott, Jim Holshouser, and Jim Hunt—was formed in June 1990, to address the problems of North Carolina's community college system and help prepare the system to educate adults for the state's coming tide of high-tech jobs.

The community colleges in North Carolina are spending 25 percent less per student, in real dollars, than was being spent in 1973. And our per-student expenditure of $3,321 is more than $1,000 less than the national average. The salaries paid to community college faculty rank the state 48th among 49 states with two-year state schools.

Richards

These are surprising and discouraging statistics, considering North Carolina's historic role 25 years ago in fashioning a unique system of higher education, one open to anyone with the initiative to take advantage of it. The skill level of the labor force was raised, and new industry came to the state in record numbers. That, in turn, raised the standard of living and helped North Carolina close the gap nationally and in many instances move ahead of neighbors in the Southeast.

Surry and surrounding counties continued to grow in skilled employment that is needed to operate modern machinery and equipment being purchased by industry. Most local industries have added employees in the last five years. Present-day employees must have basic to advanced educational and technical skills to survive in today's industry.

Surry Community College is trying to provide assistance in education and training to help manufacturing concerns stay competitive with other states and with the influx of foreign competition. Four items are necessary for the success in this endeavor: (1) a cooperative spirit; (2) knowledgeable people with good teaching skills; (3) people willing to work at improving themselves; and (4) adequate funds to provide the classes and training.

According to North Carolinians for Community Colleges, the pool of new entrants into the labor force is declining, and many workers do not possess the skills needed by industry—a mismatch for the high-tech future we would like to envision for our state. By the year 2000, according to economic forecasts, North Carolina will have only 550,000 of the 760,000 new job-market entrants we need to sustain growth.

North Carolinians for Community Colleges hopes to alleviate some of the problems by urging the state to allocate adequate funds to the community colleges. As a result of the committee's actions, the State Board of Community Colleges approved a budget request at its meeting in September to the Advisor Budget Commission, the Governor, and the General Assembly for an additional $135 million to better prepare citizens for a future workforce.

The request is an investment in the greatest resource of the state: the people. With a well-educated, -trained labor force, North Carolina's future will remain bright. We must continue encouraging citizens to look for every possible means to meet their "God given" potential in life.

SCC Officials Proceed With Building Project

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Surry Community College officials are moving ahead with plans to build a $3.5 million Health Sciences Building to house the college's nursing, emergency medical training and related health programs.

The project received approval this week from the college's board of trustees. The trustees directed SCC President Dr. Swanson Richards to use the services of architect Fred Butner, select a building site and make utility studies.

The new building is the result of an expanded nursing program and a new Licensed Practical Nursing program. In addition to providing classrooms, laboratories and office space for health sciences, the structure is to include a day-care facility.

The $3.5 million cost of the building is hoped to be divided between different parties. Richards will ask the Surry County Board of Commissioners for a $333,000 allocation during this fiscal year and $333,000 for each of the next two years to provide local funding. And he will request an additional $2.5 million from the N.C. Department of Community Colleges.

The commissioners and state officials already have been confronted about the allocations. Richards discussed the matter with the commissioners earlier this year, asking them to designate local funds for the project. He made similar requests to the state for funding to complete the total cost package.

Richards previously has discussed the need for an expanded nursing program, saying that the college received 300 applications for nursing studies this year and was able to accommodate 65 nursing students. He said that figure would need to be decreased to 55 students for adequate training in the program.

The nursing program also has run out of classroom space. The Nursing Department is now in a building that formerly housed the Business Department. And Richards said that space has been outgrown.

While the Licensed Practical Nursing program was started at the college recently, nurses' aide and EMT programs have been part of the health services curriculum for some time.

The day-care facility will have a two-fold purpose. Richards said students and staff members with children can use the facility and it can help train child-care workers in a new program to be offered at SCC.

Richards earlier said that the college was exploring a facility that could serve between 75 and 85 children. But the architectural design of the structure to fit the building site will have a bearing on how the day-care space will be situated.

An electronics/computer science building constructed two years ago is the newest structure on the college campus. Next to that, the library is the most recent facility added at SCC. It was built around 1977.

Butner, the architect chosen for the project, has served as the architect for all of the college buildings. The new one is expected to be ready for use in mid-1994 if the project remains on schedule.

Vaccinations Can Cut Down Spread Of Flu

By M.C. DAVIS
News Staff Writer

As illnesses go, influenza is not typically considered life-threatening. Most people fully recover. But some studies suggest about 20,000 people in the U.S. die annually from flu viruses, or related complications.

Due to these statistics, public health officials and others have been bracing themselves for flu and colds since September.

The Surry County Health Department advises that the spread of flu may be reduced through vaccinations.

Those especially concerned with the situation are doctors, nurses and others in both hospital and outpatient care settings who have extensive contact with patients most likely to have flu; employees of nursing homes and chronic-care facilities who come into contact with patients prone to have flu viruses; people who provide at-home health care to high-risk persons; and those who provide essential community services.

Nurses of the Health Department vaccinated about 40 Surry Community College employees Thursday by request of the college. June Key, a Health Department RN, said this was her third year administering the vaccine on campus.

"Most people are pretty mature about getting their shots," she said while taking a break from her post at SCC Thursday. "But some people still have misconceptions about flu shots. Some think the shot will give you the flu because the vaccine is killing off whatever you need to combat it."

Key added, "We encourage people to get vaccinated about the first of November, so the vaccination's peak protection period will be effective when the flu season is at its worst. That's about February."

Another RN from the Health Department who was administering flu shots Thursday, Amy Quesinberry, admitted that she had not taken the vaccination herself.

"Well, I've been sick lately," she said sheepishly. "We don't advise anyone to get vaccinations while they have a fever because then the vaccine won't give you any protection from the virus." Quesinberry said those people should not get vaccinations until the fever has run its course.

Key added that people should not receive flu shots if they are allergic to eggs. And women who are pregnant, or think they may be pregnant, should consult their doctor before asking for a shot.

The Health Department gives the vaccine to people under 18 years old provided they get an order from their doctor. "But this vaccine is refined enough that even 6-month-olds can take it," Key said.

The flu shot promotion usually starts about September, when people approach the Health Department asking for the shots. Then around October, the nurses begin making their rounds in the community and give shots at schools, industries and rest home facilities countywide upon request, Key said.

One of the SCC employees who decided to take a shot at the vaccine, Jo Ann Marshall, is a part-time librarian. "It wasn't too painful last

SCC Student Recalls Gulf Duty

By M.C. DAVIS

Reservists who are called to active duty in support of Operation Desert Shield write letters. They write a lot of letters.

Cards are nifty, simple props — although Game Boy and other pocket-size video machines are preferred.

"There was nothing to do. I think I read five paperback books when I was at the United Arab Emirates," said Staff Sgt. Kris L. Transou of the N.C. Air National Guard.

The Elkin resident has only lived in Surry County, with the exception of four years in San Antonio, Texas, while in the active U.S. Air Force.

Surry Community College is conducting final exams this week. Transou is in the nursing program there, and hopes become a registered nurse in 1992. But first things first: He has to catch up with his classmates. Because Transou did time in the Persian Gulf, he missed about a month's worth of class assignments, he said.

"We had a television, a VCR and about 12 tapes," Transou recalled. "I must've seen parts of 'Total Recall' at least 10 times. I don't think I saw the entire movie from start to finish," the reservist said with a slight disapproval in his voice of the cinematic experience.

It's a whole different view from the inside. For example, numerous cards and letters mailed by schoolchildren as class projects are slowing mail delivery. The reason is that too many times, the letters are mailed individually. The recommended procedure is to put them in one huge envelope, then mail them together, Transou said.

Millions of schoolchildren were writing letters to servicemen in the theater, a generic term used to describe an area of operations. "All the various countries, all the places where personnel are stationed, are called theaters," he explained. "I remember getting letters from some kids in Charlotte."

Transou said he flew in airplanes, but never piloted them. He was part of a medical crew involved in the 156 Aeromedical Evacuation (AEF) effort, based in Charlotte.

"The guard is a principal component of the reserves," he continued. "In fact, the Air National Guard is a principal component of the U.S. Air Force Reserve. So the delineation is that the Air Force Reserve is directly under federal control. Oftentimes, the National Guard is under some control of the respective governors of the individual states. We have a dual role: We serve the governor and the president, as do all people in the National Guard," he said.

After four years in the active Air Force, Transou returned to Elkin in 1984. He realized that unless he enlisted into the National Guard or Army Reserve, his time in the military would be purged for retirement benefits.

"You're a veteran. But who cares?" he said. "If you go into some component of the reserve, you can continue your military career and continue to build your 20 years to retire. And the beautiful thing about the National Guard is that you can have a military career in the Air Force, and have another life, too."

Transou said he was in Saudi Arabia for six days. "I saw a lot of sand when we flew over there. It was a different culture, a different belief system.

"I went in the United Arab Emirates for three weeks flying live air-evacuation missions out of that country," added the local man.

He said the United Arab Emirates is farther south and east of Saudi Arabia. A small country, he said it was commonly referred to as The Emirates.

"Our unit had not been activated yet. We're rotating on a volunteer basis. I deployed Aug. 30 till Oct. 1. The difference is that we are subject to being activated. When the National Guard unit is activated or federalized, then we would lose our distinction as being National Guard," he noted.

"I was in Alaska for annual training when Kuwait was invaded on Aug. 2. But immediately after that, they asked for 20 volunteers from our unit to deploy. We rotated out with other people who were on 30-day orders. We went over in September so they could come home. I'm not really sure, but I understand that a lot of people are going over there for the duration of the Persian Gulf conflict."

As an aeromedical evacuation technician, Transou basically was a flying emergency medical technician. His job involved loading supplies onto a C-130 aircraft to leave room for the wounded — both litter patients (people on stretchers) and ambulatory patients (those able to walk).

"We'd get alerted at about 3 a.m. And we would go load medical supplies, configuring the airplane based on what the projected patient load would be. We'd get this information probably the night before flying, and take off when the front-end crew was ready," Transou related.

"We went into so many countries that I stopped trying to keep up with them all. Sometimes, they didn't even tell the pilot where we were going. They would say, 'We're in Landing Zone 11.' Some of the days were longer than others. We always had the heat and humidity to deal with. We would pick up patients from one landing zone, and some would stay with us until we completed the mission, depending on what sort of treatment they needed and where that treatment was available.

"Believe it or not, we had psychiatric patients on every mission. A lot of the young people were having problems dealing with the stress. This was in September. None of the injuries were combat-related, of course. There was no combat going on when I was there," Transou continued.

"But we could almost always count on having one or two psychiatric patients per mission. The patient numbers varied. There were some missions when we'd just have one patient. And there were missions where we had 25 patients."

Regardless of which country the soldiers found themselves in, the setting remained constant: "Sand and more sand."

"I can't go back on a volunteer basis because of my commitment to nursing school," Transou concluded. "I've lived like an animal for the last seven weeks to make up for a month of work that I missed in September."

"Now, if the unit is federalized or ordered to active duty," he said, "then — of course — it's my obligation to go. But my commitment to nursing school is such that I just couldn't volunteer to go back."

SCC seeks funds for health building

By SHEILA LONG
Staff Reporter

A $3.5 million health sciences building to house the nursing programs, emergency medical training and other health programs is in the works for Surry Community College (SCC).

Dr. Swanson Richards, SCC president, will ask the county Board of Commissioners for $333,000 in this fiscal year and for $333,000 in each of the two following years to provide local funding for the building.

An additional $2.5 million will be requested from the state to cover remaining expenses.

Last year the college requested that the county board designate local funds for the project, and Richards made a similar request to the state for funding.

The General Assembly did not appropriate funds because of the budget crunch, and it is uncertain how the request will be handled in the next session, when budget shortfalls are expected to be worse.

Richards said the 25,000-sq.-ft. building would house classrooms, laboratories and office space. It would have enough space for a day-care facility for students, faculty and maybe the community, Richards said, adding that students would get first bid, followed by faculty members and the community on a first-come-first-served basis.

"There certainly is a need for the day-care facility," Richards said. "We have a large evening enrollment that needs someone to care for their children while they attend classes."

Fred W Butner Jr. Associates of Winston-Salem has been hired as the architectural firm to select a site for the building and to perform utility studies of the area. The firm has served as the architect for all of the college's buildings.

If the building project remains on schedule, the building is expected to be ready for use in mid-1994.

Richards said the expansion is indicative of expanding health-care programs at the college.

The registered [illegible] program at SCC has been doubled to meet the need for trained RNs, Richards said, adding that the college also has introduced a program to train Licensed Practical Nurses (LPNs).

Richards said the LPN program was initiated in response to the growing need for the service, considering the growing elderly population.

Surry Community College Makes Construction Plans

Surry Community College trustees last week voted to move ahead with plans to construct a new Health Sciences building which would house the college's growing Registered Nursing, Licensed Practical Nursing, Nurses Aide, emergency medical training for EMS, and other allied health programs.

Dr. Swanson Richards, SCC President, was given the go-ahead by the trustees to use the services of Fred Butner, architect, select a site, and make utility studies. Butner has served as architect for all of SCC's buildings.

Richards will also ask the Surry County Commissioners for a $333,000 allocation during this fiscal year and $333,000 for each of the two following years to provide local funding. He will request an additional $2.5 million from the state to cover remaining expenses. The building is expected to cost in the range of $3.5 million and would be ready for use in mid-1994 if the project remains on schedule.

Richards also said that in addition to providing classrooms, laboratories, and office space for the health sciences, the new building will include a day-care facility. He added that the configuration of the building and design by the architect to fit the site would have a bearing on how the day-care space would be situated.

The college had proposed to Surry Commissioners last year that it would need these new facilities and asked the board to designate local funds for that purpose. It made similar requests to the state for funding to complete the total cost package.

SCC has doubled the size of its RN training program to help meet the need for trained registered nurses and has introduced a new program to train LPN's, in response to the increasing need for that type of health service, especially with the elderly population.

The nurses aide and EMT programs have long been part of SCC's health services curriculum.

Also at the community college, officials have announced new assignments for two members of its administrative staff.

Dr. Jim Reeves, formerly Vice President of Student Services, has been named Vice President of Instruction. Mike McHone, former counselor and director of the college's Focused Industrial Training (FIT) program, has been named Dean of Student Development Services, succeeding Reeves.

Reeves is a Surry native and joined the SCC staff in 1967. He is currently serving as state president of student development officers in community colleges.

McHone is also a Surry native, having joined the college staff in 1978. He has worked extensively in recruiting and student services and was named to the Industrial Training post in 1989.

McHone said he expects the Winter Quarter registration to exceed registration a year ago. This year's Fall Quarter, which ends with exams today, showed record enrollment.

"The trend suggests continued goon enrollment," McHone said, "and since uncertainties and slowdowns in the economy traditionally bring increased interest in vocational and technical programs, we could see a significant rise in enrollment for those areas."

Winter Quarter registration begins November 26 and first class sessions begin on November 28.

SCC Enrollment Figures High Despite Recession

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Surry Community College is not being affected by the nationwide and local recession. Instead, the college is experiencing record enrollment during a time when others are starting to feel the recession crunch.

Local figures show the college to have its highest enrollment this year — 2,210 fulltime students. In 1989, the college had 2,005 fulltime students, up from 1,958 in 1988.

College President Dr. Swanson Richards told the Surry County Board of Commissioners last week that the recession is not affecting the college's enrollment. He said enrollment is higher this winter quarter than it has ever been.

"...In periods or times when unemployment is high, we experience an increase in enrollment. It seems like during recessions, we have the highest enrollment all the time," Richards said.

With the winter quarter just getting started, enrollment has already reached 2,800, according to Dr. Sherry Shaw, director of records and registration at the college. "And we are still starting classes," she said.

The 2,800 students presently enrolled in classes represent the largest winter quarter enrollment, Shaw said. She explained that the 2,210 enrollment figure used for the 1990 fiscal year is based on fall quarter enrollment for budget projections.

"We get our biggest enrollment in the fall. Winter will drop off pretty significantly by around 200 students and then it will come back up again in the spring," Shaw said.

More students are enrolled in winter quarter classes this year than ever before — even to the point of passing the fall quarter enrollment marks. That, plus the fact that enrollment is increasing every year, is encouraging to college officials.

The recession, tuition at other colleges and universities, increased programs and the college's open admission policy are some of the reasons Shaw gives for the increase in enrollment.

"My personal feeling is as tuition at other schools, particulary four-year schools, continues to increase, the community college system will see an increase in students," she said.

"I don't see good or bad times will ever cause us a fall in enrollment. And for that reason, parents who have a child wanting to go to college can send them here locally for $400 a year or send him away for $8,000 a year. What are you going to do when he is getting the very same courses. Most people now are seeing the advantage of coming here," Shaw said.

Present figures indicate that less students straight out of high school are enrolling at the community college. Shaw said that is true but it is not a problem. "The average age of our student is 29," she said.

And, the recession does have an effect on the enrollment. "Anytime there is a recession and people are out of work, we see an increase.

"People who are out of work are sometimes faced with a decision that they might not have otherwise made and see that this is a good chance to go back to school and get another skill or change career fields. And they think that as long as they are not working, why don't they do something good with their time," Shaw said.

An added benefit of attending the community college is an open admission policy that is used. "You can walk in the door at 8 a.m., apply, be accepted and pay your fees and be ready to start class the next day. It is a very simple and painless process. And we are glad to see students," Shaw said.

She noted that veteran's benefits are improving and allowing more people to enroll in college. "The military is strongly encouraging their forces to become involved in education courses. And now we are seeing more young veterans coming to us," she said.

But there are some programs that are seeing a decrease in enrollment, such as the welding program. Shaw said the reason for that is that other programs are offered that involve welding, such as industrial maintenance, that students are now taking. "That is just my feeling.

"Of course, we would like to see a couple of programs be larger. And we are always doing things to try to increase the awareness of the community college," Shaw said.

Foothill Focus: Fiddlin' Away

Students Are Flocking To Fiddling Class

By M.C. DAVIS
News Staff Writer

Ask Ken Bloom what traits he looks for in a student and he most likely will respond on two in particular: self-discipline and a real interest in music.

"It's a very delicate thing," said Bloom, a music instructor at Surry Community College. "Playing any type of musical instrument requires a lot of time, a lot of practice, and a fair bit of self-discipline. What gets you through those tough, boring areas is a real interest in what you're doing. Your own goals get you through those tough times.

"I have had plenty of students who were very slow, and who don't pick up things quickly," Bloom continued. "That doesn't bother me at all. If somebody wants to do it, I'll be there all the way. If somebody doesn't want to do it, then I don't want to do it either. It's just a waste of time and money."

Bloom is such a reactionary of the first waters. He is so provincial in his musical tastes that no violin etudes of Chopin are allowed in his class. There are no baroque selections, and definitely no "Air On The G String."

"This is not that kind of class," he said. "This is beginning fiddle class."

When asked if SCC has practice rooms for these players, Bloom said, "They all have houses, and — hopefully — understanding spouses."

Bloom instructs the methods of old-time music. He said that Kentucky bluegrass, which is not taught here, is more structured technically.

A Los Angeles native, Bloom learned to play most wind and string instruments beginning at the age of 10. He started out as a jazz player, and saxophone was his instrument. At 45 years of age, he looks back with fondness for the hobby that became his means of income.

His father was in the lumber business. The SCC instructor said he learned woodworking from his father at the age of five. But the music scene Bloom was surrounded by and the people he went to high school with changed all that.

"The first road tour I did was when I was 16," he recalled. "(The) first band I was in went to Europe. A lot of people in that band later became well-known studio players of one kind or another: Tim Weissburg was one of the flute players; Jim Gordon, who was a drummer for Eric Clapton; Tom Scott, and a bunch of other people whose names I'm sure you've never heard the name of."

And on that note, Bloom said Linda Ronstadt made some of the best Mexican cooking he has ever tasted. "Linda's great," he said as his face glowed with the memories of some 20 years ago. "She used to live up the street from me .... when I lived in Hollywood. They were getting ready to go on tour in about two months. They called me up for an audition and they said, 'Great.' But I've known Linda from before that."

He moved to Surry County about three years ago. Bloom had visited Surry County a few times before he decided to make himself at home here. And, by the time he made that move, he had acquired more than a few playing partners.

Bloom's visits to Surry County in years past included trips to fiddlers conventions in Mount Airy and in Galax, Va. Networking was easy because music is everywhere. This claim is heard frequently. But is it hype?

"No, it's not hype. It's real," Bloom maintained. "In the first weekend in June, at the Veteran's Memorial Park, they have Mount Airy Fiddlers Convention on Friday and Saturday. People know that this is going to happen. And they come for the contests. And people come to hear the music.

"But mainly what happens at a convention is people come in, camp on the grounds, and they play music. You meet people from all over the place, and you play music with them. You kind of walk around the grounds, and after a while, you get the feel whether it's cool to join in or not."

Further, in a given Saturday night, he said people gather at one another's house expressly to play music.

"Lots of times, it's a great way to meet people. I met lots of people in the park because we had a common interest. And then, one might say to me, 'You really ought to meet so-and-so.'

"My life in Surry County is very hectic," he said. "I build violins and I have to make sure they get shipped on time because I told the clients to expect their instrument on a certain date. Well, no place is perfect. New York City was stressful. But that was a different kind of stress here.

"Those are great. We would camp out in the Veteran's Park and hold open jams. Some of them were not so open, and you can kind of sense which ones would welcome another violin player in the jam.

"Ninety-nine percent of my teaching has been with adults, people who are in their late teens and up to their 70s. On a few times, I have taken very young students.

A senior citizen carrying a guitar entered Bloom's classroom. The man chagrined at the fact his miniature violin was left unused during his grandson's childhood. The youth is now well into high school. And he has hardly looked at the instrument, let alone picked it up.

"It's worth about $100 and I thought if I bought it for my grandson, I could teach him what I know about the violin," the man said. "But he never took an interest in the instrument. It's a good instrument. Do you know of anyone would would be interested in taking it off my hands?"

As luck would have it, Bloom, a Pilot Mountain resident, had just agreed to take on a 5-year-old student at his home.

"She is highly motivated and she will need a small violin to start her off with. The small violins are not going to give the same volume as you get from the traditional violins. But they are small enough for a kid to play and train on," he explained. "It's an instructional tool, which should last them two or three years."

"They grow out of it soon enough anyways," the older man said.

"Sure. And what's the use in building a standard violin in a smaller size when that would cost as much as a standard violin? I'll see if I can find somebody who is small enough to appreciate your instrument," Bloom assured the man.

Violins are built to standard dimensions, about 13 inches long in string length. For educational purposes, there are violins made to smaller dimensions, which are reduced by eighths. At smallest, the instrument looks more like a model of a fiddle instead of a real musical instrument.

"They usually don't bother lavishing a tremendous amount of effort in making a really fine-sounding ¼ violin. The price you would have to sell it for would be equal to a good, quality violin," he explained to the curious. "The fiddles sound like a pocket fiddle from the 18th Century. They literally were to be placed in the pockets.

"I look at my role as a teacher as someone who has been down the road before," he explained. "And someone who can help you avoid the pitfalls and get you over the rough parts. But a teacher can't get inside your body and practice for you. Teachers may be able to help you do some of the things you want to do, but they can't make you do it.

"You certainly can't generalize in any way why people are attracted to music and others are not," he said. "Some people come from musical families. And there are people like myself. My whole life has been music. And nobody in my family plays," he revealed.

"Why does someone have the in interest and the drive to continue a particular area? Is it genetics? Is it environment? Is it because the moon is in the seventh house? Who knows?" he mused.

College Seeks $50,000 Increase

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — The Surry Community College Board of Trustees has approved a proposed local budget for the upcoming fiscal year that includes an increase of more than $50,000.

The proposed budget totals $741,500, according to Wayne Motsinger, the college's business manager. The package calls for $53,569 more in the local operating budget than the present year's $687,931. The next fiscal year begins July 1.

Motsinger said the requested 7.5 percent increase in funding from Surry County is needed for "a normal operating situation. The increase is basically for inflationary measures on our different expenses."

Utilities, fuel and repairs to facilities and older buildings are some of the expenses to which Motsinger referred.

The college trustees approved the proposed local operating budget earlier this year at the request of the Surry County Board of Commissioners. Beginning Thursday, the commissioners will be meeting with officials from all agencies funded by the county to discuss budget situations.

The college's proposed budget is to be presented to the commissioners Thursday night.

Also Thursday night, the college trustees will be asking for a commitment from the county for $330,000 this year. The money represents one-third of a $1 million allocation SCC is requesting from the commissioners to build a new health-science building and a child day-care center.

The college is requesting $2.5 million from the state and $1 million over the next three years from Surry County for the project.

SCC offers oral history course entitled Farm Voices

Rural life is changing in North Carolina. The family farm is disappearing and with it we are losing family traditions, age old stories, methods for carrying out many farm tasks, and a way of life. Much of this has been carried on through oral traditions, never written down.

Surry Community College is offering a course entitled "Farm Voices: Recording the Oral History of Rural Life" in an effort to help interested persons learn how to record and compile information stored only in the memories of our older generation.

Oral history is way to better understand and appreciate one's own heritage, community, and culture. The "Farm Voices" class will include an introduction to oral history, a regional historical overview, techniques for collecting and preserving stories, as well as field trips and individual interviews with senior citizens. Each student will have the opportunity to gather a life story on audiotape. The course may be used for teacher certification renewal.

The class will begin on Monday, March 4, 1991 on the college campus in room C-206. The class will meet each Monday evening from 6-9 p.m. The registration fee will be $26.25 for the 10-week course. Class size is limited, interested persons must preregister by calling Marion Venable at 386-8121 from Elkin.

Dr. Anne Phillips, Greensboro College professor, who recently completed her dissertation, "Continuity and Change: Farm Women and the Production of Flue-Cured Tobacco, Stokes County, North Carolina, 1925-1955" will be the instructor. Dr. Phillips received her undergraduate degree from Wake Forest University, Master of Arts in Teaching from Duke University, and doctorate from the University of Maryland. She is a native of Stokes County.

Guest speakers will include: Frank Levering, author, who regularly writes book reviews for the Los Angeles "Times," The Washington "Post," Baltimore "Sun," Winston-Salem "Journal," and Smithsonian Magazine; Paul Brown, musician and researcher of regional traditional music; Patsy Ginns, oral historian, teachers, and author of two books of North Carolina oral history, Snowbird Gravy and Dishpan Pie and Rough Weather Makes Good Timber; Karen Coxe, oral historian; and Roadside Theater, a community based, professional, ensemble theater based in the Appalachian Mountain coal country of southwest Virginia and eastern Kentucky.

LOCAL ARTIST ATTENDS NATIONAL PORTRAIT SEMINAR

Jacksie Cumby of Mount Airy recently participated in the National Portrait Seminar, a three-day study conference for portrait artists held in Atlanta. The Stouffer Waverly Hotel was the setting as more than 300 portrait artists, artists' representatives and gallery directors convened, representing 36 states, the District of Columbia, Canada, Mexico and Yugoslavia.

Also attending from this area was Abbe Rose Cox, art instructor at Surry Community College.

The seminar program concentrated on all aspects of the profession of portrait painting. Nationally known New York portrait painter John Howard Sanden was the chairman of the seminar, along with his wife Elizabeth.

Delegates were buoyed by a nationwide resurgence in the art of portrait painting, with galleries, dealers and agents reporting increasing interest by the public in portraiture, once considered a declining art. With portrait painting a thriving profession including thousands of practitioners nationwide, the commissioned portrait is again one of the most highly desired and cherished possessions in American homes.

Mrs. Cumby started her portrait painting in 1980.

Art show at library will be April 21st

The annual Spring Art Show will be held on Sunday, April 21, 1991 from 2-4 p.m. at the Charles H. Stone Memorial Library.

The show will consist of art work by approximately 95 students of Linda Marion's Art Class in conjunction with Surry Community College-Off Campus.

The show will include oil painting, portrait painting, drawing and water color.

The admission is free, refreshments will be served and the public is invited.

The meeting will be 6:30-9:30 p.m. in the Electronics Building on the Dobson campus. There is no charge. To get further information or to reserve space call 386-8121, or 366-2921, toll-free from the Elkin area.

Community College Plans Graduation Friday

Mount Airy News 5-22-91

News Staff Report

DOBSON — Surry Community College will hold graduation ceremonies Friday at 6:30 p.m. in the college gymnasium.

The college also has scheduled a pinning ceremony for its nursing graduates Saturday at 7 p.m.

The college will award degrees Friday to a record number of students — 274 — according to Michael McHone, dean of student services.

McHone also announced that James H. Templeton, retired vice president of the college, will deliver the graduation address.

Commencement will begin with an invocation by Don Boyles, the president of the Student Government Association. This will be followed by opening remarks from McHone and musical selections by the SCC Chorus, under the direction of Benny Younger.

Dr. Swanson Richards, college president, and Dr. James Reeves, vice president of instruction, will present the degrees.

Since the first graduation ceremony for 56 students June 3, 1968, Surry Community College has grown steadily, McHone said. It provides liberal arts and career education for residents of Surry, Yadkin and surrounding counties.

This year's class includes 76 students who will receive an Associate in Arts degree; 26, Associate in Science; 158, Associate in Applied Science; and 14, a vocational diploma.

In addition to the 274 graduates, many other students completed course requirements and transferred to another institution, McHone said.

Pinning Ceremony

Thirty-nine SCC nursing graduates will be pinned during ceremonies Saturday at 7 p.m. in the auditorium of Elkin High School.

Dr. Richards, college president, and Beverly Essick, the director of health careers at SCC, will present the RN pins.

(Lists of students receiving degrees and those pinned will appear in the graduation edition of The News on Sunday.)

Graduation Becomes A Family Affair

By NICOLE HATCH
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Surry Community College's graduation tonight will be a family affair for three students receiving their diplomas.

Gail Joyce and her two daughters, Emily Joyce and Amy Johnson, will be among the 274 students graduating. And Saturday night, the three family members will receive their nursing pins during a special ceremony.

Gail and her daughters are the first mother-daughter team to complete the nursing program together at SCC, according to college officials.

Going to school together was not a planned event, according to the family. "It just turned out that way," Amy said.

Emily, the youngest daughter, said she graduated from high school and had enrolled at Surry Community College when her sister said she was interested in getting a degree. Amy previously had been taking business courses at night.

> "They said, 'Mama, why don't you go with us?' So I came up here with them to pre-register and they talked me into it."
> —Gail Joyce

And the next thing Gail knew, her daughters had talked their 45-year-old mother into going to college also.

"They said, 'Mama, why don't you go with us?' So I came up here with them to pre-register and they talked me into it," Gail said.

She said that entering the nursing program was not something she did lightly. "I had always wanted to be a nurse, but I didn't think I could do it," Gail said.

The mother related that she got married soon after graduating from high school and worked at various jobs between staying home and taking care of her children. So when her daughters talked her into going back to school to become a nurse, it was almost like her dream was finally coming true.

The same seemed to be happening to Amy, who also got married upon graduating from high school. But Amy did not wait as long as her mother did to go to college.

What is it like going to school with your mother and sister in the same classes? The family members from Westfield say other students often comment on the three attending school together.

"Everybody just thinks it is great that we could do this. A lot of people say they could never go to school with their mom," Emily said.

Emily admitted that attending classes with most of her family was difficult at first. "I was just graduating from high school and had a hard time at first."

She added that she was both going to school and living with her mother. Emily is now living by herself. "It is easier for me now that we are living apart," she said, later adding, "She is more like a sister than our mom."

Graduation

Going through the nursing program together did help the three family members. They said they have often studied together and help each other when one has a question.

"We are all competitive," Amy said. "Naturally, we have to keep up with each other."

Being that way helped the trio get through the rigorous nursing program the college is known to have. The family members said that while other students were dropping out, they were studying harder to keep up with each other.

Each of the three has a different field of nursing in which they want to work. Emily is interested in the Intensive Care Unit, Amy wants to work in the emergency room and Gail in pediatrics.

But all three will be employed by Forsyth Memorial Hospital in Winston-Salem, where Emily already has a job and her mother and sister are pursuing positions.

Said Amy, "We must have all just wanted to do this, because we never really talked about all of us doing the same thing."

Nixon Receives Scholarship

The Trustees of the Albert and Jessie D. Martin Scholarship are pleased to announces the selection of Carrie Jean Nixon, daughter of Roger and Jean Nixon of Boonville, as the recipient of this year's scholarship.

The scholarship was established by Jay Martin of Memphis, Tennessee, in honor of his parents, Albert and Jessie Martin of Boonville. Albert Martin served as principal of Boonville School from 1935 until July, 1972. Jessie Martin taught at Boonville School from 1935 until June, 1965.

Carrie will graduate from Starmount High School this spring and attend Appalachian State University this fall. She plans to major in elementary education.

SCC Urges Early Registration For All

Surry Community College has announced registration plans for its upcoming fall quarter. Pre-registration is currently underway, and will continue through the summer. College officials are encouraging students to pre-register early this year, since statewide budget restraints may limit the number of classes available for the fall quarter.

For students who do not pre-register, Registration Day will be on Thursday, August 29. Hours of operation that day will be from 8:30 to 12 noon, 1 to 4 p.m., and 6 to 8 p.m. The last day to enroll will be September 9.

Mike McHone, Dean of Student Services, said he expects registration to be at or near an all-time high. "The experience of the past two quarters suggests that we can expect a near-record enrollment." He said that increasing tuition costs at four-year colleges and universities around the state have prompted more freshmen candidates to turn to community colleges, where tuition rates are substantially lower. "This lower tuition cost, plus the convenience of being nearer home, and the opportunity for many to attend college while holding a full-time or part-time job, make the community college more attractive."

McHone said classes will be filled on a first-come basis. "If enrollment is larger, we might not be able to add classes in a given subject since our budget is limited. But we will not sacrifice quality. That's another reason we urge those who can pre-register early to be assured of a class placement."

College Costs Increase

Hike In Tuition Has Its Advantages

News Staff Report

DOBSON — A statewide college tuition increase should actually increase the enrollment at Surry Community College this fall, according to an SCC official.

Mike McHone, the dean of student services at SCC, said that while the increase also will affect the Dobson college, it will mean more kids staying home for their first two years of college instead of enrolling at costlier four-year schools.

McHone said tuition was increased by 20 percent this year at state colleges.

At SCC, that means the cost of one credit hour has jumped from $8.75 to $11.50. In addition to that hike, students will have to pay for their first 14 hours of credit.

Previously, students only had to pay for their first 12 hours, McHone said. Most students at the college take at least 14 hours. The two factors combined will raise the cost of tuition by about 50 percent, the college official added.

For a full-time student last year, he said tuition and fees to attend SCC were $105. This year the cost will be $161.

"This could have a bearing on our full-time enrollment," McHone said, adding that any decrease likely would be insignificant.

Even with the increase, the cost of community college is still much lower than attending a four-year school, McHone pointed out. Community college students also can live at home while attending classes and work a full- or part-time job.

These advantages have increased the school's enrollment, which was at an all-time high during the 1991 spring quarter. Enrollment for that period was 2,789, McHone said.

Summer school enrollment also is up about 5 percent over last year, McHone said, which leads him to believe the school should be at near-maximum capacity in the fall.

"If that's indicative, we could have large fall enrollment," McHone said of the recent enrollment situation.

A large enrollment has both good and bad benefits for the college, according to the official. While SCC will benefit from the extra revenue, it also will lose some flexibility.

SCC will continue to pre-register students until Aug. 29, McHone said. After that, students will have until the end of the first week of classes to register.

The fall quarter begins on Sept. 3.

Education Runs In The Family For New Teacher Of The Year

News Staff Report

DOBSON — Conrad Holcomb is the new teacher of the year at Surry Community College.

Conrad

The teacher and chairman of the college's Division of Social Sciences has been presented the Excellence in Teaching award for 1991 and will compete with other community college teachers for state honors.

Holcomb is from a family of educators and has followed that tradition for over a quarter-century. A native of Mooresville, his mother and father taught in elementary school, his brother teaches at West Wilkes High School, his sister is a substitute teacher and her husband teaches at Dickinson College in Pennsylvania.

He won the N.C. Optimist Oratorical Speaking Contest while in high school, advancing to the international competition in Canada.

He graduated in 1960 from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he majored in international studies. The same year he was awarded the Scottish Rites Fellowship and, in 1963, received his Master's degree in international affairs at George Washington University. This was followed by a year of graduate work in political science at UNC-Chapel Hill.

After teaching in the Surry County Schools for three years at State Road, Holcomb applied for a teaching post at the then-new Surry Community College. He was accepted and taught his first class in the Surry Central High School building until the college facilities next door were completed.

He was the first chairman of the Division of Social Sciences at SCC and has held that position without interruption since then. The division covers the disciplines of anthropology, economics, geography, history, philosophy, political science, psychology and sociology.

The faculty of the division includes seven full-time members. An eighth will be added next year.

"A good teacher," Holcomb says of his teaching philosophy, "must know the subject matter. He must also be interested in the student, especially in his intellect. He must be fair and all students must know that he is committed to fairness."

Radio Enthusiast Uses Gear To Keep In Touch

By NICOLE HATCH
News Stuff Writer

Andy Webb spends most of the time he is in his car using the atmosphere to help someone in need, talk to a friend and even listen to astronauts in space.

Those who have seen a station wagon with at least five antennas on it likely have seen the Mount Airy resident's mobile ham radio station. Given the situation he might be operating it for his personal use, during an emergency situation or to teach Boy Scouts about his favorite method of communication.

A red license plate displayed in the front window of the station wagon informs people that Webb is a ham radio enthusiast. The sign displays Webb's call letters for his hobby, which are N4VRD.

"So much of what we hear is chitchat," Webb said. "But ham radios really come into much more use than that. They are especially beneficial during emergency situations or when someone needs something and you don't have access to a phone."

A licensed ham for three years, Webb said he has used his radio several times to help someone.

> "So much of what we hear is chitchat...but ham radios really come into much more use than that. They are especially beneficial during emergency situations...."
> —Andy Webb

"For example, I had a friend one day that was traveling and his car broke down on a very hot day like we have had this week. He is paralyzed from his arms down and that became a life-threatening problem. And yet he was able to get in touch with me by ham radio and I was just before calling AAA when someone locally heard him on the radio and came to his rescue," Webb said.

The Knollwood Drive resident gave another example of how the ham radio equipment in his car has come in handy.

"At a recent camporee with several troops attending, a little boy came running up to me and said, 'Mr. with all those antennas on your car, do you have some kind of radio you can call my daddy on? I left my sleeping bag at home.'"

According to Webb, he had just what was needed to help the Boy Scout.

"We used a two-meter VHF to access a mountaintop repeater that by pressing certain control tones, or touch tones, I could cause it to hook up to the telephone lines and make a call to his dad's telephone. His dad was coming over anyway that evening, so it worked out very conveniently for all of us."

All of the antennas on Webb's car are not just for show, according to their owner. He said the shortest ones are for Ultra High Frequency (UHF) bands, the medium antennas are for Very High Frequency (VHF) bands and the longest ones are for High Frequency (HF) bands.

Webb disclosed that he has a hidden antenna on his car which he uses for a silent alarm he installed to protect his equipment.

"There are many different frequencies — or bands, or what some people think of as wavelengths — that you can operate on," he said.

While riding home from work at Surry Community College last week, Webb was able to listen to a Soviet astronaut talking to someone on Earth.

"I was listening to the Soviet space station orbiting overhead and heard the cosmonaut thank someone on Earth."

"Apparently, these cosmonauts are very hungry for news from the surfaces. We have all gotten bulletins to send them news from here. I have attempted to, but you don't want to interrupt them if they are in conversation," Webb said.

Webb said he also has attempted to communicate with astronauts on American space shuttles before, either by voice or through his laptop computer digital system. "One day I will be able to and will be successful in my attempts," he predicted.

Ham

"It is like a giant party line and they (the astronauts) are hearing everybody. I generally start hearing them when they are about 1,500 miles away and it is a very weak signal," the radio hobbyist said. "I don't have the right combination of antennas and transmitters yet."

Most ham radio enthusiasts have their equipment set up in a spare room of their home. Webb said he used his station wagon for his ham radio station because it is much more mobile.

"I work with the Boy Scouts a lot and I am trying to get it set up to where I can do demonstrations at various locations," he said.

As the secretary of the Yadkin Valley Amateur Radio Club, Webb has run a cable from his car into an elementary school in Yadkinville to set up a station there for one of the club's meetings.

Webb also said that having his ham radio at hand at all times helps him provide a community service that other hams throughout the world can supply during an emergency such as a hurricane or tornado.

"When the power is off, we are still able to communicate with the Red Cross and emergency officials about any necessary information they need to provide emergency services during a crisis," he explained.

Ham radios also came in handy during the Persian Gulf War when area ham radio operators were able to link servicemen with their families in the United States.

"It really serves a good purpose of passing messages and handling non-commercial traffic of personal information," Webb said. "Amateur radio is not for any business use. It is strictly for the development of radio craft.

"Some people call it a hobby," he added. "But over the years, the radio amateurs have actually developed technologies that have moved into commercial applications. For instance, the cellular telephone system is closely modeled after the mountaintop repeater systems."

Webb explained that his interest in ham radio stems from his younger days. "I am old enough that I grew up in a time when Dick Tracy had a wrist two-way radio.

"And I suppose I have been fascinated with it ever since the late 1950s, when my father bought two citizens band radio kits and I built them and we were licensed to operate them," he said.

That interest has remained with Webb over the years and has been heightened by his involvement in scouting. Webb said he made his first transatlantic contact with a ham in England last October during a scouting Jamboree on the Air (JOTA).

"I had a group of young scouts with me and they couldn't believe that I was actually talking to someone in England," Webb said. "They seemed to enjoy it as much as I did."

Teacher receives excellence award

Conrad Holcomb, teacher and Chairman of the Division of Social Sciences, has won Surry Community College's "Excellence in Teaching" award for 1991, and will compete with other community college teachers for state honors.

Holcomb is from a family of educators and has followed that tradition for over a quarter-century. He is a native of Mooresville in Iredell County. His mother and father taught in elementary school. "Students know they are in a college course when they're in his class . . . he works well with student problems and in one-on-one situations . . . No one has higher performance standards for his students," a fellow SCC teacher says.

His philosophy of teaching: "A good teacher must know the subject matter. He must also be interested in the student, especially in his intellect. He must be fair, and all students must know that he is committed to fairness."

SCC Offering Safety Course For Hunters

News Staff Report

An adult hunter-safety course will soon be offered for first-time license buyers, who have yet to complete the requirements for purchasing a hunting permit.

The Continuing Education Division at Surry Community College will offer the 10-hour course, which begins on Aug. 20. The class will meet each Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. for two weeks in classroom A-207 (Administrative Building).

Brian Mills will conduct the class, which requires a registration fee of $25. Interested adults may register at the first class meeting.

North Carolina residents age 65 years and older may register free of charge.

Hunter education courses became mandatory July 1 in North Carolina. A person who wishes to buy a license this year must produce an old hunting license, sign a statement that he or she was previously licensed, or show proof of certification in a hunter safety course.

A report of an abundance of doves in North Carolina is good news for hunters, particularly with the dove season approaching.

The North Carolina Wildlife Commission has set the date for the start of the mourning dove season for Labor Day. There is a 12-bird daily bag limit and a possession limit of 24.

The season runs Sept. 2-Oct. 5, Nov. 25-30 and Dec. 13-Jan. 11, and allows for hunting from ½ hour before sunrise to sunset.

Federal frameworks from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service prohibit states from opening the webless migratory bird seasons before Sept. 1. This year, Sept. 1 falls on Sunday, the day of the week when hunting is prohibited in North Carolina.

State wildlife officers will strictly enforce state and federal baiting laws, but will not inspect any field at the landholder's request to determine whether it is baited for migratory game birds.

Under state and federal rules, a court may convict a hunter of shooting over bait without having to prove the violator had knowledge that the field was baited. While the law is controversial, it was enacted to prevent practices that are harmful to the resources.

Baiting is defined by law as "any area where shelled, shucked, or unshucked corn, wheat, or other grain, salt, or other feed capable of luring, attracting, or enticing birds."

The commission has also set the seasons for woodcocks, common snipe and Canadian geese. The woodcock season will run from Dec. 5 through Jan. 18 with a daily bag limit of three and a possession limit of six.

The common snipe season is Nov. 14 through Feb. 28, with a daily bag limit of eight and a possession limit of 16.

A special Canadian goose season was set for Sept. 3-10, west of Interstate 95 only, with a bag limit of two and a possession limit of four.

A special permit is required to hunt Canadian geese during this season. Permits may be obtained from any licensing agent west of I-95.

Community College Students Score Well On Nursing Exam

By NANCY DAMRON
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Thirty eight out of 39 Surry Community College nursing students passed a national licensing exam given in July.

"This is a good record," said Beverly Essick, who chairs the college's Health Occupations division. "Not many other schools around have one as good."

The National Council Licensure Examination for registered nurses is given annually to candidates who primarily have completed associate degree programs at various community colleges.

Of the state's 48 community colleges, 44 fielded students for the July exam. Only 13 of those had a 100 percent passing rate.

"The exam is designed so they can test the minimum qualifications for beginning registered nurses," Essick explained. "So the test is not necessarily (easy). We know what it is they need to know. We think we're preparing them to take the test as they should."

Essick said the examination is revised each year because of changing medical technology. "We're not teaching the same things this year they taught five years ago. We have to upgrade as medicine upgrades."

Essick says 400 people applied to enroll in the SCC program that began with the start of the fall quarter Tuesday. Only 60 were accepted.

"The state Board of Nursing dictates how many students you can have based on clinical resources," Essick said, referring to the available hospitals where students gain on-the-job training.

Essick pointed out that many of those not accepted into the program are qualified, but because of the limits only the best can be enrolled. "We can only have 105 students in the total program, so we have to take the best ones," she said.

"We wish we could take everybody."

Nursing

Opening up the program to more students not only would require more participating hospitals in the area, but more classroom space. In addition, the training is expensive. Many students must drive to Winston-Salem hospitals for clinical work and the studies are so demanding that little time is left for part-time employment, Essick continued.

"We just attribute our success to a good student population. We have an excellent faculty and good administrative support and it's really bad (about limited nursing openings) because a lot of people get mad," she said.

Because of the nationwide nursing shortage, most SCC graduates find jobs, Essick said.

According to state figures, the community colleges produce higher student marks on the nursing exam than the state University System, private two- and four-year colleges and private nursing schools.

SCC names soprano visiting artist

GENA POOVEY

Soprano Gena Poovey, a native of Newton and graduate of Pfeiffer College and Southern Methodist University, has been named visiting artist at Surry Community College.

Poovey most recently served as visiting artist at Stanly Community College in Albemarle and prior to that was visiting artist at Montgomery Community College in Troy.

She earned her BA in Music Education at Pfeiffer in 1981. She received her Master of Music degree at SMU and while in Texas continued studies in voice and choral music, taught and performed at SMU, performed in area churches, was selected to present a research study at the state convention of the Texas Music Educators Association in San Antonio, and appeared in the April, 1988, issue of the national publication, "The Music Educators Journal."

During her first year in the Visiting Artist Program, Poovey planned and participated in many activities throughout Montgomery County and areas of North Carolina. She performed in the Visiting Artist "Night of The Arts" presentations in the Kennedy Center, Washington, D.C., and in Raleigh.

This past summer and the previous summer, she was a student at the Brevard Music Center and for the past two years she has been actively involved in the Western Piedmont Lyric Theatre opera program, beginning in her home county of Catawba.

Poovey's presentations of performances, lectures, workshops and demonstrations are available free through Surry Community College to schools, churches, civic clubs and other non-profit organizations in Surry and Yadkin counties.

Nursing graduates score high on state exams

DOBSON — Nursing graduates of Surry Community College have again scored high in state examinations for Registered Nurse status. Ninety-seven percent of the 1991 graduates passed the examination, which is administered by the State Board of Nursing. (Graduates of two-year and four-year institutions take the same exam.)

All 38 SCC graduates are now employed as registered nurses with various health agencies throughout the Piedmont area.

This includes former LPN's (Licensed Practical Nurses) who studied in the SCC evening program over the past two years and who have passed the exams and are now registered nurses. They were employed full time while taking evening courses and did their clinical work on weekends.

SCC has an overall passing rate of 97 percent since the nursing curriculum was revamped in 1982, according to Beverly Essick, Chairman of the Health Services Division. "Out of our total 235 students since that time, 229 successfully completed the RN Board examinations on their first writing. The others have subsequently passed," she said.

Jerry Weaver's real hobby is helping others.

Of course, Weaver has several traditional hobbies such as carpentry, farming and playing golf. But his real interest outside of his work and home is helping others, especially those who are in need.

"I just like to be involved," Weaver said from his office in the library at Surry Community College. "I just like doing it, especially when I get a chance to help other people who are less fortunate."

Weaver said he does get some personal satisfaction out of being involved in community groups. "But I don't do it to get self-recognition or for plaques.

"I do this instead of having a second job. I really enjoy it," he said. "I am interested in seeing the community grow and develop and continue being a good place to live."

Weaver has lived in Dobson 19 years, after moving from neighboring Alleghany County, where he grew up on his grandparents' farm. Since moving to Dobson to be the director of learning resources for the college, Weaver has taken an active role in making the town a good place to live.

The first year he moved to Dobson, Weaver became a member of the Lions Club, and has held a number of local and district offices for the group. He also serves on the Dobson Community Council, the Better Appearance Team (BAT) committee and the Piedmont Summer Berry Festival Committee. He is also the church clerk for Dobson Baptist Church.

Weaver often is seen at various school events in which his children are involved. That is because he wants to support the things that help his children. His school involvement includes membership in the Surry Central High School Boosters Club and being a past president of the Parent/Teacher Organization. And he has also worked with Little League basketball and baseball teams.

Through his work involvement, Weaver is now the vice president and president-elect of the North Carolina Community College Learning Resources Association. He also has served as a North Carolina government delegate to the White House Conference on Libraries.

Most recently, Weaver has spent much of his time serving as a town commissioner and is Dobson's representative to the area Piedmont Council of Governments. He has been a commissioner for four years.

Weaver said that all the clubs and organizations he is associated with stem from his getting involved in the Lions Club when he first moved to Dobson. "It seems like getting involved in one thing lead to getting involved in all these other things. But I really do enjoy it," he said.

As a child, Weaver was involved in several school activities and held various class offices, he said. He also played sports at Piney Creek High School in Alleghany County.

Weaver describes his childhood as a happy one, even though his parents divorced when he was 5 years old. After the divorce, he and his brother lived with his mother, Marie Edwards, at her parents' farm outside of Sparta.

Living on the farm was fun, although there were many chores to do before and after school. One chore Weaver remembers is hand-milking about 13 cows every day before school. He spent his afternoons and summers working in the tobacco field or with the beef cattle and sheep.

It was during his teen-age years that Weaver received a lot of influence from his grandfather and his high school principal, John Woodruff, now the retired superintendent of Alleghany county schools.

"Both of these men had a lot of influence on me," Weaver said, adding that now his family plays a tremendous role in his decision-making.

After graduating from high school in 1963, Weaver attended East Tennessee State University, despite really wanting to enter the U.S. Navy.

"My mom and my brother wanted me to go to college. My brother had just graduated from college and my mom didn't want me to be a factory worker all my life like she was," he said.

So Weaver decided to go to a university in Tennessee instead of N.C. State University for several reasons. The main one was that he wanted to do something different.

"I didn't want to go to Appalachian State University because my brother had just graduated from there. Nothing against my brother, but all during school I had heard that my brother had done this and that. I just wanted to get out of his shadow," he said.

And, he only knew of one other person from Sparta who attended East Tennessee State University. So, Weaver packed his bags and moved to Tennessee for 2½ years before deciding that he was going to do what he had always wanted to do — join the Navy.

"I had no set focus in my life at the time and didn't really know what I was going to college for," Weaver said. "So I joined the Navy in 1966 for four years. That was a good experience for me because it gave me a chance to get a more focused direction for my life."

After four years in the Navy, Weaver returned to college in Tennessee and graduated with a bachelor's degree in political science. He then took a job as a graduate assistant while attending graduate school. One year later, he received his master's degree in instructional communications.

Weaver explained that he majored in political science because he had considered going to law school after graduation. But that changed when a teacher who went to his church got him interested in communications, he said.

"Communications is just something that came along. It was a new field at the time and an area of television production that was just coming into being," he said.

After receiving his master's degree, Weaver applied for various positions at community colleges throughout the Carolinas, Virginia and Tennessee. He said an adviser told him that community colleges was a good field in which to work.

Not long after that, Weaver moved to Dobson to become the part-time director of learning resources and a part-time instructor at Surry Community College. He no longer teaches and is now the full-time director of learning resources.

Working as director of learning resources is not what Weaver would have imagined himself doing when he was in graduate school. "What I had envisioned myself doing was working as a director of media services in the television production field," he said.

Weaver said he did not envision himself staying with the college as long as he has, either. "When I took the job, I pictured myself staying here two or three years.

"But I came here and liked my job so much that I have stayed here," he said. "Plus, I like Dobson and Surry County. And it is close to home and a lot of my in-laws and relatives."

Family is important to Weaver, who is married to the former Ann Newman of Sparta. He said he enjoys spending time with his two children, Julia and Wes.

"I am very family oriented," Weaver said. "I enjoy participating with my kids in their school activities. When you have kids, there are a lot of things that revolve around them. And I enjoy being involved in those things."

Carpentry and farming are two things Weaver enjoys doing when he is not involved in a community activity. He said he enjoys working with wood. And he especially likes going to his farm in Alleghany County.

"My farm is my grandfather's homeplace. It is so nice to go there for the weekend. There are no telephones and it is nice and quiet up there," he said. "Of course, I don't do any farming there now."

Those are the only two things Weaver has in mind for his future. He has no plans to change careers, even though his interest in the Navy has never faded. "If I had a second choice of a career, it would have been a career in the military.

"My Navy experience gave me a chance to grow up a little bit," Weaver said, adding that he will never force his children to go to college, even though they already have plans to do so.

"A lot of kids do not know what they want to do when they go to college."

That is one reason Weaver said he has enjoyed his work at the community college. "This college gives kids a chance to explore a career at an affordable price and still earn trasnfer credits if they choose to continue their education.

"I think education is so important, especially when you have a focus," said Weaver. "The rewards you get from being in education is seeing young people achieve and having a better chance in life. That is worth more than anything to me."

Registration For New Quarter Brisk At Community College

By TOM JOYCE
Managing Editor

DOBSON — Registration is brisk for the winter quarter at Surry Community College.

But those who still haven't signed up for the college's upcoming quarter shouldn't dismay, even though class periods for certain subjects are already full.

"There's still room in any class on the schedule that a student would like to take," Director of Registration Sherry Shaw said late Tuesday afternoon. But this doesn't mean they can wait until the last minute of the pre-registration period, which ends Friday.

"The whole week is pre-registration, and we feel like we'll be real busy all week," said Mike McHone, SCC's dean of students.

After the first day of pre-registration Monday, McHone said, "It's been jam-packed all day." He reported long lines, which the college official said signalled a trend for the remainder of this week.

"A lot of students realized ... to get the schedule they want, they wanted to get in there first thing in the morning and get their classes put in the computer."

Said Sherry Lowe, another SCC spokesman, "We had stressed the fact that they needed to do it earlier, and many really took it seriously."

The rush has caused some classses on the winter schedule to be filled, according to McHone, who said that one section of anatomy, one of business and another of microbiology had already been closed out by the end of the day Monday.

However, this doesn't mean those subjects are unavailable altogether, as explained by Shaw — just that certain time periods of them are already taken up.

"Nothing is closed out completely," she said Tuesday.

Shaw said some students have been so concerned about getting classes that it resulted in the long lines. Pre-registration traffic was not as heavy on Tuesday at it was Monday, officials said.

See COLLEGE, page 3A

College

The hours of the pre-registration period this week are 8:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. today and Thursday and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

As part of a new approach this year, students were encouraged to pre-pay during the pre-registration week in order to avoid another trip and delays that can occur on the final registration day. That will be on Nov. 21, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.

Classes for the winter quarter begin Monday, Nov. 25.

"We think we will have about the same or larger enrollment than we did last winter," McHone said.

Part of this expectation is due to the continuing sluggish economy, the dean of students added. "As long as the economy is not doing well, or especially if people are out of work, they will try to upgrade their skills to hopefully move back in the job market ... at a better position."

Visiting artist got early start on performance career

By DEBORAH BAKER GOLDEN
Lifestyles Editor

DOBSON – At an early age, Surry Community College's visiting artist must have had some idea of what she wanted to be when she grew up.

Performance-oriented, Gena Poovey began taking dance when she was 5, started playing the piano in the second grade, did a lot of group singing in church choirs, and during high school, played the saxophone in the school band and was a majorette.

By the time she was in the fifth grade, she was teaching baton to first- and second-graders in the basement of her home.

She sent a flyer to the students advertising the baton class and attracted 13 students. Her mother made her keep a list of her income and expenses. At the end of the year, her students had a recital for her 4-H club's May meeting, and she had made about $100.

Those early performances and teaching experiences are coming in handy now. As the college's visiting artist, the soprano sees her role as not only one of performing at local functions, but also of educating the public about her artform through lecture-performances and program notes.

A native of Newton, Poovey earned a bachelor of arts degree in music education from Pfeiffer College in 1981. While at Pfeiffer, she played the bassoon.

"It was a soprano's golden opportunity to be a bass," she says, laughing.

From 1982-86, she taught choral music and drama in the Montgomery County Schools.

"I came to the point where I was hungry to learn more. It was not that I was so sick and tired of doing this, but I was hungry to do more," she says of her reasons for leaving education.

Feeling that she would be doing her students a disservice by attending school part time and teaching full time, she enrolled as a full-time student at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas.

She was impressed by Southern Methodist's policy of accepting only five students a year in the master's music program she was interested in and the individual attention the students received, she says.

At Southern Methodist, she continued studies in voice and choral music, taught and performed at the university and in area churches.

The work was academically demanding and in her first year, a little disappointing.

She felt her voice was not improving dramatically during her first months, but a professor convinced her to continue in voice for a year, and she'd see a change.

She had to consider that she had been in a classroom, projecting loudly to about 40 students, for four years, the professor said.

"It's difficult to be in a classroom using your voice and to continue singing," she says.

While at Southern Methodist, she was selected to present a research study at the state convention of the Texas Music Educators Association in San Antonio, and appeared in the April, 1988 issue of the national publication, the Music Educators Journal.

Poovey entered the visiting artist program through a friend–a trumpet player– she had the opportunity to perform with while teaching in Montgomery County.

She completed the necessary paperwork, sent in a tape and was listed among the 140 visiting artists in the state. With only 58 schools employing the artists, she had to interview for a position and was accepted for a year in Montgomery County.

She spent two years in Stanly County and is spending her last year in Surry County.

The visiting artist program began in 1971 as a cooperative venture between the North Carolina Arts Council and the State Department of Community Colleges. The purpose of the program is to cultivate appreciation of the arts within the community college system and the community it serves.

GENA POOVEY

The intention of the program for the artist is to serve as a performance "stepping stone," Poovey says, with artists staying in the program for four years.

During the past three years, Poovey has averaged more than 100 appearances per year and has performed for more than 18,000 people in 1990 alone. She performed in the Visting Artist "Night of the Arts" presentations at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. and in Raleigh, she sang the roles of Barbarina in "The Marriage of Figaro," Tessa in "The Gondolierss," and danced the role of Dream Laurey in "Oklahoma" during the 1991 season of the Brevard Music Center Opera Workshop. She has also appeared with the Western Piedmont Lyric Theater in Hickory.

Last weekend, she was a guest soloist at Ovens Auditorium in Charlotte where Messiah by Handel was performed.

Sunday night, she will be guest soloist at the Community Chorus performance in Elkin.

Though the Charlotte concert allowed her to sing with a full orchestra and in the context of the entire Messiah, rather than parts of the music, she says the Elkin concert should be one of the more enjoyable parts of her Christmas season.

She says she has benefitted from the bonding that goes on between Community Chorus members who are all pulling together to reach a common goal.

Personally, she says, it is more fulfilling to get to know the people she is singing with.

"I expect it to be the highlight of my Christmas season because of the people involved, the quality of music and the spirit in which it is done," she says. "I'd hate for anyone to miss it."

The 31st Annual Community Chorus Concert, made possible by grants from the Foothills Arts Council, the N.C. Arts Council Grassroots Program and a special offering taken at the concert, will begin at 7:30 p.m. at First United Methodst Church in Elkin. At 7 p.m., there will be music by a brass ensemble directed by Larry Irwin. The Community Chorus is directed by Fran Greene with assistant directors Amy Johnson and David McCollum. Johnson and Amy Tayloe are organists.

The annual Community Chorus concert, featuring soprano Gena Poovey, will be held at First United Methodist Church in Elkin Sunday at 7:30 p.m.

Local quilters keep craft alive

By Wm. Nelson

Do you know the difference between lap quilting and frame quilting? Or that this traditional craft is alive and well? Read on.

Surry Community College has sponsored a number of lap quilting classes at the Pilot Mountain Civic and Recreation Center the past few years. The current class started in October and will end the middle of December. Jennie Simmons is the instructor. According to her pupils, she is an expert teacher, although everyone expressed how much they all learn from each other. From beginner to seasoned quilter, you can find them here.

Like Tina Hill. She started quilting about twenty years ago, and is working on a sampler now. A sampler is a quilt with each square a different pattern. It takes twenty 18" squares to make a regular size quilt. Each square starts as a 12" piece on which a border is sewn to make the right size. And this is all done by hand, not on a sewing machine. The handiwork is incredible to see. The stitches need to be straight and even. That, of course, only comes with practice, and maybe some inborn talent. "When I decide what pattern I want, I just go ahead with it. This is all I do is make quilts," Tina laughed.

With samples of their work hanging in the background, quilters in Jennie Simmons' class at the Civic Center work on their current projects.

Mallie Cain broke her glasses, and so wasn't sewing today. But she has made pillows,a tote-bag, and a baby quilt. "I like sewing a lot, and I learned to quilt here," she said. She also enjoys being with the other women in the class.

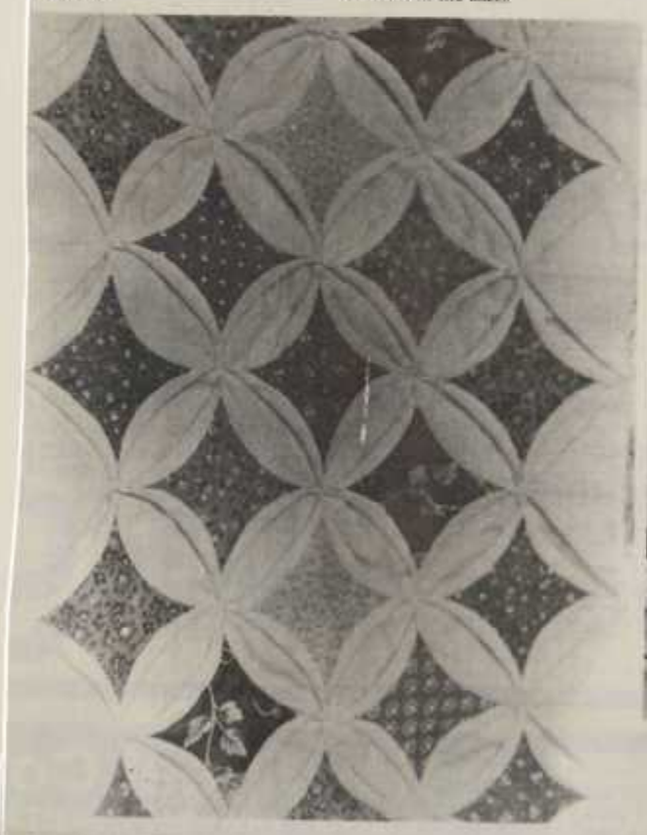

Today, Mary Martin is sewing the border around the edges of her sampler. It looks as though she will have it finished by December 16 when the class is over. "I'm going to save it since it's my first sampler," she explained.

The process starts with the choosing of a pattern to reproduce in your quilt. There are books and catalogues where you can find hundreds of patterns. Then you need to choose what colors to use. This process makes quilting very personal and unique to the quilter. It's pretty much impossible to find the cotton batting once used. Today, a polyester fill is used. Called a traditional polyester batting, it doesn't ball up like the cotton. And seems to be as warm.

"I've helped everybody here, I guess," Nellie Hughes said. In fact, she was hemming a dress for Mallie today, since she broke her glasses. Nellie has worked on three or four projects with others. She chose a pillow for her project this time. She said that she has been doing this since she was eleven years old.

Virginia Dearman has also been quilting a long time. "But I used a frame. I quilt on a bed or on a frame." Except when she's in this class. She is making a quilt with hand pieced squares.

Please See Page 2

Quilting

Polly Bennett is working on a tote-bag with a churn-dash pattern, sometimes called a monkey wrench pattern. "I have a real high admiration for all these pretty things the others have made," she noted. "This is my very first quilt."

"I sew for my grandchildren and I took all the scraps to use in this quilt," Vetra Covington explained. This is also her first quilt, a full sized one. She chose the Shoo Fly pattern. Each one is different, and now she is sewing them together.

Joann Ayers drives all the way from Virginia to come to this class. "It's my first quilt, and I thoroughly enjoy the class. It's good therapy," she said. Joann is making a full size quilt using the pinwheel pattern.

"This quilting has a tranquilizing effect on me," Mildred Wall said. She is making a pillow using a triangle pattern, but has made tote-bags and two baby quilts using the triangle pattern. It is her third class under Jennie and she said that she has learned a lot.

Grace Cox is working on her fourth Cathedral Window quilt. "I just take my time, but it takes a while," she said. This pattern is so intricate and detailed, with a lot of stitches in it. There is no padding because each square is ironed until it's very stiff and then folded onto itself. This way, it creates its own padding. The overall effect is very much like a stained glass window.

"This is my second quilt," said Essie Waller. She bought the pieces for her quilt at a yard sale for fifty cents. They were already cut into squares. This sure would make the whole process go a lot faster. Essie started quilting pillows about ten years ago, then branched into tote-bags and now she enjoys lap quilting.

Margaree Fulk has quilted three tote-bags and four pillows this time around. Now she is working on a bag using a Nine pattern. "This is my fifth tote-bag," she explained. Margaree started last year and has sold some of her bags at a church bazaar.

These ladies sure were happy. Anyone who likes sewing would enjoy being in this class. As instructor Jennie Simmons said, "It's a great place to catch up on the news. A wonderful place to come to on a Monday and hear what's happened."

Elkin woman striving to read

By DEBORAH BAKER GOLDEN
Lifestyles Editor

Imagine going to the mall to buy a new dress, selecting a style and a color that suits you and not being able to tell if you can afford it because you can't read the price tag.

Imagine trying to grocery shop with no knowledge of what you are buying or if you are getting the best price.

That's what life was like for Judy Finney of Elkin.

Now, life has changed.

Through Adult Basic Education Classes at Elkin High School, offered through Surry Community College, Finney is learning to read.

The 47-year-old woman would like to get her GED, but says she has a long way to go. She began taking classes in Boonville three years ago, and continued her studies in Elkin at the library with Wanda Pipes. She now attends class on Tuesday nights at Elkin High School with Joan Sanders as her teacher.

Though she says she attended school "some" as a child she didn't "get too far from first" grade.

She worked in a laundry and "didn't get to go much," she says.

She was, however, able to learn skills that helped her get a job at White Swan Uniform Rentals where she works three days a week. She also does some work for her neighbors during the week.

On Tuesdays, as soon as she finishes work at White Swan, she goes to class.

"It's kind of hard, but I'm accomplishing something in my life," she says. "I used to couldn't read. Going to school has opened up a lot of skills for me. I can go out and do things for myself."

Finney says she depended greatly on her husband and children to help her with prices in the past. They still provide transportation for her.

She gets excited over being able to buy groceries herself, and over finding "specials" in the grocery ads in the newspaper.

And now that she knows her numbers, she can figure out a price and determine if she has enough money to pay for an item before she gets to the cash register.

"I used to pick it up and guess at it," she says. "If I did that, maybe I wouldn't have enough money to pay for it."

Though she didn't use to be able to do arithmetic, she can now add and subtract and is starting to learn multiplication.

She says reading "big words" is easier for her than small ones.

"I guess I put more energy into it," she says.

"I look at it this way, if you want to accomplish something, you'll strive. It's hard, but the harder a thing gets, is when you try harder," she says.

She says she has been encouraged to attend school by her family. Sanders says Finney is "one of the best cheerleaders we've ever had," noting that she encourages other students.

Finney says she doesn't know why people don't complete school.

"Maybe they don't have the confidence to better themselves. Don't ever be scared of things that can better yourself. Have confidence in yourself and what you're doing," she advises.

Adult Basic Education programs are offered through Surry Community College(SCC) at several locations throughout the community.

Judy Riggs, director of Basic Education at SCC, says people who can't read do manage to exist in the world. They shop by pictures, so are unable to buy generics or comparison shop. If faced with filling out a form, they often ask others to do it for them, saying they've left their glasses at home.

She recalls the story of a truck driver who couldn't read. When he arrived in a town and needed to find a particular place, he'd ask for written printed directions. Printed directions were matched with printing on road signs.

There are many reasons why people decide to learn to read. Riggs says most have specific reasons like wanting to learn to read the Bible, getting a driver's license, wanting to help their children with homework or realizing their jobs could be in jeopardy.

Riggs says ABE instructors often try to incorporate the person's reason for wanting to learn to read into their studies.

Claude Eldridge, coordinator of the Elkin High School program, says some of the students can read, but have difficulty understanding instructions. Others have trouble in math, while others want to complete their high school educations.

There is no cost for the ABE program.

If you'd like to learn to read or to complete your high school education, you may call Riggs at 386-8121 or 366-2921 for information on county programs or Cathy Mounce at 835-3135 for more information on ABE programs at Elkin High School.

Coalition in Surry Will Fight Illiteracy

WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL Wednesday, April 15, 1992

■ Reading services will be emphasized

By Paul Collins
JOURNAL SURRY COUNTY BUREAU

A coalition is being organized in Surry County to help fight illiteracy.

Its focus will be to publicize reading services that are already available, said Judy L. Riggs, one of the organizers. "We have a lot of resources, and we don't think people always know about them."

Reading services are available through public schools, Surry Community College, libraries and the Surry Literacy Council.

Mrs. Riggs, who is the director of basic education programs for Surry Community College, said that there are no statistics on illiteracy in Surry. But, according to the 1980 census, the most recent figures available, 36 percent of the people in Surry at least 25 years old had an eighth-grade education or less.

According to the 1980 census, 59 percent of Surry's population at least 25 years old did not graduate from high school. The figure was 44.8 percent for North Carolina.

The coalition, called "Surry — The County of Readers," is "a coalition of diverse organizations and individuals who are working to promote reading and literacy for all ages," Mrs. Riggs said.

Among the goals are: to provide a network of reading services; to provide opportunities to begin, to improve and to enjoy reading; to distribute information about reading, literacy and education. Other goals are: to support literacy growth in the workplace and to celebrate the value of reading throughout life.

Two organizational meetings have been held, and a steering committee and a publicity committee have been formed.

Representatives of these agencies or groups are involved: the Surry, Mount Airy and Elkin school systems; the two chambers of commerce in Surry; the county social-services, health and mental-health departments; the cooperative extension service; five libraries; Yadkin Valley Economic Development District Inc.; the Employment Security Commission; Surry Literacy Council; the International Reading Association; representatives of the media; and several businesses and industries.

She said that the coalition has not yet planned its activities, but she hopes that it will have some type of kickoff event this fall.

The coalition may have periodic public-awareness campaigns. It may have brochures printed and seek publicity.

Joan A. Sanders, the branch librarian at the Elkin Public Library and one of the organizers, said: "I think it is needed because the level of illiteracy is high in the county. . . . We can make a difference by letting the public know that the services are already available — most of them free."

THE PILOT APRIL 29, 1992

Surry Community College will host its 12th annual Foreign Language Festival on the Dobson campus Thursday, April 30. Over 1000 students from 16 schools in North Carolina and Virginia are expected to attend. Activities will begin at 10 a.m.

Gena Poovey, SCC visiting artist, will sing during the opening ceremonies. Throughout the remainder of the day students will present projects and language-related booths, and carry out activities representing foreign cultures in music, dance, drama, costumes, speech, dramatic readings and foreign foods. Awards will be made in all categories.

North Carolina schools participating are South Stokes, North Stokes, North Surry, Surry Central, Elkin, East Surry, and Mount Airy. Virginia schools are Galax, Independence, Carroll County, Patrick County, Woodlawn, Fries, Marion, Grayson County, George Wythe and St. Pauls Intermediate.

Mrs. Sharon Gates, instructor in foreign languages at SCC, is coordinator for the Festival.

"The Festival gives students the opportunity to study and demonstrate many aspects of foreign culture in a wide variety of competitions; also, the events broaden the students' understanding of other people and how they live in a world of increasing cultural integration," Gates said.

She added that much of the Festival will be of interest to adults; therefore the activities are open to the public.

DOBSON — Susan Johnson, a well-known face around Surry Community College, says she is the kind of person who places the needs of her friends and church as high priorities in her life.

Johnson considers herself lucky to have grown up near White Plains in an environment of friends and family.

"I just had the typical childhood of any kid growing up in this area at that time," she said. "I grew up doing family type things — Sunday afternoon at my grandmother's, that kind of thing. It was just a typical childhood for a kid growing up in the 1950s."

Johnson has fond memories of her days at Dobson Elementary, saying she "loved every one" of her teachers, refusing to identify her favorites because she still sees them on a regular basis. Her time as a clarinet player in the elementary school band still serves as a reminder of a simpler time.

"Going from Dobson to Williamson with a group of students your own age, 12 or 13 years old, was a big thing back then," she said. Trips to the Azalea Festival and local Christmas parades were events that were viewed as an honor, Johnson said.

Looking back at her years of high school, she says simple things were appreciated more.

"I ran around with a group of friends and did the typical things you did in those days. Homecoming was a lot bigger thing than it is now. We had all kinds of activities like class floats for homecoming. We would always find somebody's carport and get together to make our class float. It was a lot of fun for us."

Johnson continued, "Very few young folks had their own vehicle back then. Some of the boys did, but most people drove their parents' car. Times were different then, you didn't just wake up on your 16th birthday and find a new car in the driveway."

Johnson says she might have had little reason to complain about her transportation, as her parents owned a blue and white 1957 Chevy. "It was the classic car from that era."

Graduating in 1966, Johnson said she and her classmates were aware of the turbulent times around her with the death of a classmate.

"In 1966 (the Vietnam War) had just began. A classmate of ours had dropped out of school and signed up and was killed in the early days of the war. It really made us aware of that conflict," she recalled.

After graduating from high school, it would almost seem that Johnson's future was following a predestined course, as she enrolled with the first class of students to attend Surry Community College. It was a move that would ensure her future career, but she says things were much different on the campus at that time.

"There were no buildings on the college campus. We met at Surry Central High School from 4 p.m. until 10 p.m. We couldn't interfere with the high school's schedule, so that was the only time we had.

"We were excited because we were a part of something new," the longtime SCC employee continued. "We were meeting kids from other parts of the county; some were five or six years older than I was. Our horizons were truly broadened by it because we were seeing people who were working full-time and then attending classes with us at the same time. It gave you an appreciation for it."

Her college class did move onto the campus in 1967, taking its final exams in the three buildings existing at the time. Johnson completed her education along with the rest of the college's first graduating class in 1968, and came to work at the institution the next morning.

"I had worked some evenings for Carlos Surratt, the director of the evening program, and the president's secretary had taken a leave of absence. I came in one day and was called into the president's office. I was immediately terrified and wondered what I had done. But, I was wrong. In fact, he offered me a job as his secretary, and I still serve in that capacity today," she said.

Outside work, Johnson is heavily involved in church activities at Piney Grove Baptist. She serves as the musical director, teaches a Sunday School class and serves on several church committees. She says she finds a great deal of satisfaction and happiness in the church her family attended as she was growing up.

Another activity involves Johnson's participation with the Good Neighbors Extension Homemakers Club, based in Dobson. "We started out as the Dobson Extension Homemakers, but the members are really from all around this region. We have them from Dobson, Ararat, Pilot Mountain and all over the place, so we thought the name didn't really fit," she reported.

"We were trying to think of a new name and somebody said, 'Well, we are good neighbors,' and the name just stuck."

Susan Johnson is a former county Extension Homemakers president, and was named "Outstanding Leader of the Year" a few years back. She is now serving her sixth year on a committee that organizes and promotes the annual Piedmont Summer Berry Festival in Dobson.

Travel is probably the one thing Johnson will admit that she doesn't get to do often enough. She says it can be frustrating, but she does try to take one-day "mini-vacations" to historic places in this area.

One vacation she says she won't soon forget was a trip to Great Britain and Scotland which allowed her to meet a longtime pen pal.

"We wrote for 16 years and like most pen pals we said we would meet some day. She was very typically British — everything you think of as far as stereotypes of the stiff, proper British person is how she seemed to be. You know how we are over here; if we haven't seen an old friend in a few years we will grab them and hug them and so on, but when I met Melanie it was just like, 'Hello Susan, How are you today,'" Johnson said.

"This was when 'Dynasty' was big, and they had this image of Americans. They thought we were all tall, handsome, living in mansions with chauffeurs to drive us around. I guess it was strange for them to see that wasn't the case for most of us."

Johnson says she has no major plans for the immediate future and would like to continue working at the college, and with her church.

When asked to describe herself, she gave a surprisingly accurate account of how others see her:

"I like to think I see the positive side of situations and try to make the world a better place. I try to be a good neighbor and friend and realize there is something of value in everyone."

Many Adults Returning To School

By JILL DOSS
News Staff Writer

DOBSON — Connie Smitherman is no quitter.

When the children's clothing plant she worked at closed two years ago, Smitherman didn't give up — she went back to school.

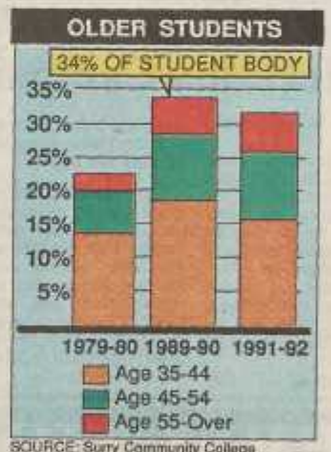

"We had an unemployment meeting after the plant closed down," said the 40-year-old Dobson native. "They told me I'd never have to go back in a factory if I didn't want to — I didn't."

The company now pays for Smitherman's tuition, books and supplies at Surry Community College, where she's working toward an associate degree and a teacher's certificate.

Smitherman hopes to enter the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in the fall of 1993 to major in English and history.

"I want to teach these subjects at the high school level," she said. "I've always been education-oriented."

Smitherman is part of a growing trend of older students on college campuses across the United States.

SOURCE: Surry Community College

"We have to recruit older students to stay in business," Dean of Students Mike McHone said of SCC. "The pool of 18-year-olds is drying up."

McHone said community colleges traditionally have had to recruit older persons because of competition from four-year schools, the armed services and other community colleges for traditional-age college students.

Nationwide, there are more students 23 or older in college than students of traditional college age. At SCC, the average age of students is about 30, McHone said.

Statistics for SCC show an increase in the number of students age 45 and over from 1979 to 1992.

"Some people are coming back to college because they need retraining for their jobs, and some are coming back to train for a job," McHone said.

But while most college students only have mid-terms and student clubs to cope with, many older students have jobs, spouses and children.

College

"I've had to sacrifice a lot to go back to school," said Smitherman, who now lives in Yadkin County. "I don't have as much time to spend with the family.

"I do my homework with my youngest daughter. That builds a little quality time," she added.

Smitherman says her family also has had to make sacrifices, such as her husband holding down two jobs so she won't have to work while attending school.

But many older college students aren't as lucky as Smitherman.

"Most of our older students work during the day, and go to school at night," McHone said. "With this economy, it's almost impossible not to work while attending college."

Smitherman said she regrets quitting college when she first came to SCC after graduating from high school.

"I just wanted to be somebody's wife and somebody's mother then," she said. "I've been somebody's wife and somebody's mother. Now I want to be me."

The presentation of the funds will take place today at the high school at 10 p.m.

According to James Templeton, co-executor of the estate with Margaret Barnes, the interest from the estate has been earmarked for East graduates who will attend Surry Community College.

"Mrs. Hiatt had two burning desires — one was to take care of her cat "Bobsie", and the other was to leave a large bequeath to the SCC Foundation," Templeton said.

The interest from the large estate, approximately $185,000, will be available to students this fall, Templeton said.

Hiatt's will provided for a selection committee to be put into place, and stipulates who is to be on the committee.

The selection committee has the descretion to give partial or full scholarships, including full tuition and books.

Templeton also noted that the committee can apply the interest back to the principal if they need to.

What follows is a biographical sketch of Mrs. Hiatt written by Mary Lois Thomas.

Mrs.Hiatt came to Pilot Mountain in 1957 when she married Mr. Charles E. Hiatt.

Her first work in the church here was serving as Chairman of Missions. She looked over the hill and saw the old colored church and thought "charity begins at home". She asked Zula Lovell to go with her to see Rev.Henry Ridenhour about this and, of course, he was "the right man" - he "took the bull by the horns" and did a wonderful job in seeing that the new Lovell's Chapel Church was built.

She served as Chairman of the Women of the Church for three years and was Chairman of Circle I until 1976. She helped Ruth Stone haul others to the meetings - as Ada Bac[illegible]ett has said, "She's the Jitney driver."

Mrs. Hiatt gave more than 100 hours of volunteer service as a Pink Lady at Northern Surry Hospital.

For three years she served as Program Chairman for the Pilot Mountain Seniors Citizens. She was a member of the United Fund Committee and the Park and Recreation Committee, but modestly said that she didn't feel that she had contributed anything to these groups.

Miss Sadie was the guiding force behind the organization of the Pilot Mountain Cemetery Care Committee, served as its Chairman since it began in 1972, and gave untold hours of her time for supervision of others and in plain hard work on her part to beautify our cemetery.

In 1976 Mrs.Hiatt was installed as Worthy Matron of the Pilot Mountain Chapter #23 of the Order of Eastern Star.

She worked at elections for 17 years - first under Mr. Pate Fulk, then under Mr. Kent Swanson, Mr. Herman Griffin and Mr. Carlton Fulton. And then last (and according to her, "the most miserable"), she was the one in charge - when machines came in and seemingly everything went wrong and she wound up with migraine headaches! Thus, she said, the desire for her service in that capacity ended for both the public and for her.

Mrs.Hiatt said she could not have done any of these things without the support and help of others. It isn't true, of course.

Mrs. Charles Hiatt

monitoring the progress of community colleges, says:

- Faculty salaries still ranked last in 1991 among the 15 Southeast states.

"We lost Beverly Essick to N.C. Baptist Hospital due to a salary increase," said McHone of the former nursing program director at Surry Community College.

- To stretch salary dollars, many colleges are relying heavily on part-time faculty members, who are paid less and generally spend less time on campus with students.

"The vast majority are excellent," McHone said. "But still, it's hard for someone who works a full-time job to be as enthusiastic in the classroom all the time."

- Three years ago, a state commission urged state leaders to invest $135 million in the community college system, but little progress has been made.

"The General Assembly in 1991 gave us $10 million to implement some of the recommendations," Richards said. "But that's not a lot when split up among 58 institutions."

Tuition Hike Coming

Local Officials Express Concern

Monday, June 22, 1992
By JILL DOSS
Staff Writer

DOBSON — Many students could be turned away from Surry Community College because of space limitations, and those who do get in likely will be hit with a tuition increase, officials say.

But neither of these problems is the fault of college officials. State officials are to blame for both, according to a new report.

The report on North Carolina's community colleges, called "On the Edge," says the state is not spending enough on the system. Also, the N.C. House and Senate have passed bills for a tuition hike, but disagree on the amount.

"What we know of this is the House approved a 10 percent increase and the Senate 20 percent," said SCC Dean of Student Services Mike McHone. "I read that Governor Martin recommended a 20 percent tuition increase in his budget. It's just a matter of them getting together to decide how much."

Tuition for full-time North Carolina students now stands at $161 per quarter.

Tuition increases of 31.4 percent and 16.7 percent in the past two years have priced the colleges out of reach of some low-income students, according to Dr. Swanson Richards, the president of SCC.

Richards said he is also dismayed about the impending tuition increase.

"I think we're getting to the point that it's going to be difficult for people to continue their education," Richards said. "For example, if you're a parent and you want to return to school, you have to think about whether you can afford to put the money toward tuition or for the family."

McHone said the tuition increase and lack of money spent on the community college system undercuts the colleges' efforts to train North Carolina workers.

"If community colleges, because of space, have to start turning people away, there is no equal opportunity education in this state. A lot of industries are still relocating to North Carolina. If they get here and can't find skilled workers, they'll go somewhere else — to another state or country," he said.

The need for more facilities is just one of the problems of the state's community colleges cited in the report, "On the Edge," prepared for a committee

Nursing Students Being Turned Away

By JILL DOSS
Staff Writer

DOBSON — North Carolina's community colleges are experiencing too much of a good thing, to quote an old cliche.

Faced with a nagging shortage of nurses in North Carolina five years ago, the state put out the word and money to entice students into the nursing field.

Now colleges, especially community colleges, are having to turn away qualified applicants to their nursing schools.

Surry Community College is no exception.

"We just don't have enough space," said Sharon Kallam, the new director of the SCC nursing program. "The problem is, we don't have enough clinical space at hospitals to train (nurses).

"We have one of the largest nursing programs in the state, too" Kallam added. "But we're mandated by law as to how many students per clinical instructor we can have."

With Surry having this problem with Northern Hospital in Mount Airy and Forsyth Memorial and Baptist hospitals nearby in Winston-Salem, other community colleges are up against even tougher obstacles in trying to train nurses.

"Last year, we had 600 applicants to the school," said Michael McHone, SCC's dean of student services.

> "Last year, we had 600 applicants to the school...273 met the requirements, but we could only take 60."
> —Surry Community College official

"Two hundred and seventy-three met the requirements, but we could only take 60."

McHone said there are six qualified applicants for every position in every community college in the state. Thirty-six of the state's 58 community colleges have nursing programs.

SCC can have only 125 students in its associate degree program a year and 30 students in its practical nurse education program.

Job security, better pay and an improved image of nurses are among the reasons for the surge in interest in nursing careers. With employment being scarce and job security even rarer, a guaranteed, well-paying job is a lucrative lure to the profession, according to college officials.

"The average starting salary is between $27,000 and $30,000," Kallam said. "They pretty much have their choice after graduating. We have 100 percent placement, too."

With this type of demand, some community colleges have waiting lists for their programs of up to three years.

SCC is trying to eliminate its waiting list with a new "Assured Entry" program. With it, a student must complete 13 core courses, maintaining a B average in each, before applying to the nursing program. Also, a passing score on an entrance exam is required.

SCC Offers Welding Program

News Staff Report

DOBSON — National surveys suggest that jobs in welding will grow by as much as 18 percent by the year 2000 and that of 800,000 new construction jobs to be created in that period, more than 70,000 will be in areas dealing with structural and reinforced metal work, pipe-fitting and related occupations.

Using these figures and known job opportunities in this immediate area, Roy Thomas of Surry Community College's welding program says skilled welding holds great promise for good-paying jobs. "I stress the word 'skilled'," he said, adding that welding graduates can be certified to do virtually any type of welding.

"Right now, our evening program is completely filled and we expect it to be filled for the fall. However, there are openings in the daytime program," Thomas said.

Opportunities exist for women as well as men. Thomas says women make excellent welders because of their concern for neat work. The program is designed for those just getting into welding and those who have been in the business for a long time but want to improve their skills in new welding technology.

Welding classes are held from 8 to 11:30 a.m., five days a week. "This is an ideal time for people who might have a second-shift job and others who have the early part of the day free," said Thomas. Registration for the fall quarter begins Aug. 30. Earlier pre-registration can assure a spot in the day program.

Surry Community College teaches all types of welding, including Shielded Metal Arc (SMA), Gas Tungsten Arc (GTA), Gas Metal Arc (GMA), Oxy-acetylene (OXA) and Plasma Arc (PA).

First Citizens Gives Grant To SCC

First Citizens Bank of Pilot Mountain has made a $1,000 unrestricted grant to the Surry Community College Foundation, for use by the Foundation to provide financial assistance to deserving students.

Announcement of the donation was made jointly by Mrs. Betty Farnsworth, member of the local First Citizens Board of Directors and also a member of the SCC Foundation Board; and Jerry Venable, manager of First Citizens' Pilot Mountain branch and also a member of the SCC Foundation Board.

They said the bank is committed to support of higher education and viewed Surry Community College as "the best opportunity for local students to receive two years of quality education close to home and at a cost that remains substantially below that of most four-year institutions."

Medical Endowment Fund Set Up At Surry Community College

The Pilot Aug July 29, 1992

An endowment fund, the Paul B. and Rachel M. Moorefield Health Care Scholarship Fund, has been established at Surry Community College by a prominent Mount Airy family with a total of 144 years of medical service in Surry County.

The fund is announced by Mrs. Laurie Moorefield Forbes of Mount Airy. The endowment honors Mrs. Forbes' father, Dr. Paul B. Moorefield, a dentist, and her stepmother, the late Rachel Moody Moorefield, a registered nurse; and also pays tribute to her grandfather, Dr. Laurimer J. Moorefield, Sr., a general practitioner, and her two uncles, the late Dr. Jones L. Moorefield, another general practitioner, and Dr. L. J. Moorefield, Jr., an optometrist.

Mrs. Forbes' father, Dr. Paul B. Moorefield, who is still practicing, received his pre-medical degree at Duke University in 1933; he graduated from the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery/University of Maryland in 1937; and practiced general dentistry in Mount airy for 52 years, from 1937 until 1989. For the past several years, he has limited his practice to prosthodontia. At 78, Dr. Moorefield is one of NC's oldest practicing dentists.

Rachel Moody Moorefield, Mrs. Forbes' stepmother, was a practicing registered nurse in Surry County for 25 years. Mrs. Moorefield graduated from the North Carolina Baptist Hospital in Nursing in 1954. Prior to her marriage to Dr. Moorefield, she worked as head nurse of the obstetrical unit at NC Baptist Hospital. After moving to Mount Airy, she worked as a surgical nurse for Dr. Ben J. Lawrence at Northern Hospital of Surry County and then for many years as a private duty nurse. Mrs. Moorefield died of cancer on June 24.

Dr. Laurimer J. Moorefield, Sr., Mrs. Forbes' grandfather, was born and raised at Rosebud, the Moorefield farm near Walnut Cove, NC. He moved to Mount Airy in 1915 after receiving his medical degree from NC Medical College at Charlotte, which was then a part of Davidson College and later merged with the University of Virginia Medical School. He did postgraduate work at the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital. In 1923, in order to accommodate the patients he had as a specialist in obstetrics and diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, he erected a private hospital on Main Street in Mount Airy. This small granite hospital was later remodeled into the Moorefield home. Dr. Moorefield practiced general medicine in his home office for 54 years prior to his death in 1969. He was the first corporate physician (for NC Granite Corp.) in the area, and legend has it that he delivered 5000 babies during his years of service.

"I certainly can't verify 5,000", said Mrs. Forbes with a twinkle in her eye, "but I overheard plenty of babies being born in Granddaddy's office which was directly under my grandmother's bedroom in the house on Main Street. I never walk past that big Catalpa tree which stands in front of the First Citizens Bank (where the Moorefield house stood) without thinking of some colorful experience I had there."

Mrs. Forbes' two uncles, Dr. L.J. Moorefield, Jr. and the late Dr. Jones L. Moorefield, also carried on the Moorefield family's involvement in health care. The late Dr. Jones L. Moorefield practiced general medicine in North Carolina, Nevada and Florida. Dr. L.J. Moorefield, Jr., practiced optometry in Mt. Airy for 10 years before moving to South Carolina. Today, he lives and practices in Inman, SC.

According to Mrs. Forbes, the grant to the College is in response to the family's "determination and desire to further the service of people in health-related fields."

Funds generated through the endowment will be made available to needy and deserving second-year students in health-related fields of study. Donations to the fund may be made to: Dr. Paul B. and Rachel M. Moorefield Health Care Scholarship Fund, Surry Community College, Box 304, Dobson, NC 27017.

Basketball Brings Two Friends Together

By TIM PRESTON
Staff Writer

DOBSON — Things have certainly changed in the 14 years that have passed since Tony Searcy and Thierry Declercq last saw one another.

The last time the two spent time together Declercq was about 8 years old and Searcy was a professional basketball player in Belgium.

"It's not the same guy. He was a little kid back then," Searcy said as the two sat in his office at Surry Community College for a recent interview. "He is a man now, not a little kid. He's got muscles now."

Declercq said he had a similar reaction when he first saw Searcy but couldn't put it into words.

Searcy offered, "I was skinnier then and I had more hair."

Declercq said his first memories of the American were of his "coaching, and being very tall."

The two met when Searcy played basketball for the "Sunair" team in Oostende, Belgium, in 1979. Searcy's wife Paige had met Declercq's mother in a grocery store while desperately searching for an item. The two families soon became friends and spent a good deal of time together.

Searcy

Declercq

"We never really learned to speak the language (Dutch-Flemish) because they spoke English so well," Searcy said with a laugh.

"I learned (English) first from Searcy and the Americans, and there is a lot of English TV," Declercq said. "And we learn it at age 12 in school as a second language."

After Searcy, who played college basketball at Appalachian State University, left Belgium and returned to the United States, young Declercq followed in his American mentor's footsteps.

Basketball became a passion and the young man only recently left the team that Searcy played on in 1979. Declercq continues to play on another team in Belgium, and notes many differences in the way the game is approached in America.

"They like to quarrel over calls — in Belgium they just play on," Declercq said with a good-natured laugh. "When they (the Americans he played with) go for a layup and miss it, they call a foul. Or if the other team gets the ball for a fast break — traveling."

Basketball is a bit more elite in Belgium as well, Declercq said. Clubs are operated for members only, and pickup games are almost non-existent. While the game is a passion bordering on an obsession in America, it is probably the No. 3 sport in his homeland, Declercq said, "behind soccer and cycling."

Searcy says he has truly enjoyed his visit with Declercq, showing him many of the pastoral and scenic views of Surry County as well as shopping in local stores.

"I wish he was staying a little longer," Searcy said. "He has seen more of the countryside. We went to the knob (Pilot Mountain State Park), but he really has had no chance to tour the cities and see the things (Americans) have to offer."

The shopping has been particularly enjoyable for Declercq, who can quote the "bargain" prices Americans pay for items that are hard to find in his country.

"For shoes, I paid $52. In Belgium, it would be $160 for the same pair of basketball shoes. Also socks, they would be $7 in Belgium. Clothes, in general, are cheaper here."

"Things we take for granted and say are expensive are not as expensive when you compare them to Belgium," Searcy added.

Diamont takes post as SCC representative

By ANDRE HAUSER
Staff Reporter

Rep. Dave Diamont has a new job.

Diamont, a Surry Democrat and one of the most influential men in the General Assembly, has recently been appointed as Surry Community College's representative to North Carolinians for Community Colleges (NCCC), a support group for the state's community college system.

Dave Diamont

SCC's Board of Trustees chose Diamont from a wide field of candidates largely because of the influence he wields both in the General Assembly and the local community, according to Dr. Swanson Richards, SCC's president.

"We wanted someone who was recognized as a state leader and as a community leader, and he certainly fits that description," Richards said of Diamont. "The Board of Trustees (thinks) he is very influential in the General Assembly and in the local community, and he is a community leader."

SCC's last representative to NCCC was D.T. Twiford, the city executive at Centura Bank in Pilot Mountain, Richards said. Twiford resigned when he moved from the area recently.

Diamont, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, has a large say in what the state's

Two Business Workshops Set

Surry Community College has scheduled two free business workshops in Room E-113 on the college campus in Dobson.

"How To Keep Your Business From Failing" will be presented Monday from 6 to 9 p.m. by C.R. "Bud" Albertson of Advanced Management Resources Inc., Thomasville.

College officials describe the program as an "excellent 'starter' workshop for those who might want to go into business some day. It is also appropriate for those involved in either fledgling or well-established businesses."

"Starting Your Own Small Business" is scheduled the next Monday, Aug. 17, from 6 to 9:30 p.m. Its presenter will be Dr. Gary C. Tilley, who directs the Surry Community College Business Center.

That workshop is designed especially for aspiring small business entrepreneurs, an SCC spokesman said. Topics to be covered include testing your business ideas, choosing the form of ownership, cash flow and developing a business plan.

College Expects Capacity Crowd

By TIM PRESTON
Staff Writer

DOBSON — Officials at Surry Community College say they are expecting a capacity crowd to sign up for classes at the school this fall.

Community colleges across North Carolina are reporting record enrollment levels for fall semester classes, but locally the number will be about the same as last year.

"At this point registration is about like last year," Dr. Sherry Shaw, Director of Records and Registration, said today. "We are at capacity, really, and we have been for the last couple of years."

Shaw said college officials anticipate more than 3,100 students to enroll for the upcoming session, with at least 1,000 new students or freshman signing up. "We should have about the same number of new students as before. As of July we had 840 new students. My guess would be more than a 1,000 (by the end of registration), that would be safe," Shaw said.

Although Shaw says she does not expect school officials to turn away any students, she does admit that space at the college is at a premium.

INTERESTED?

Information regarding registration, financial aid, and course availability can be obtained by calling Surry Community College at 386-8121.

"We certainly don't want to do that (turn students away). That really isn't what we are trying to do," Shaw said. "We have really been encouraging pre-registration for our returning students. Registration day is actually August 27, but we have been trying to get as many as we can before that. The counselors don't have as much time to spend with students on registration day."

"Last year pressed us for space," Shaw continued. "We could certainly use more space. If we had the Nursing and Allied Health Building, which has been approved by the board and the county commissioners, we could offer several more programs. We just don't have the funding for that building at this time."

The records and registration director said any returning student or prospective student should contact the college to pre-register for fall semester classes. Counselors will have more time to help students in scheduling classes and planning the best courses for particular study interests before the final day of registration, Shaw said.

One of the greatest advantages of a community college is the lower cost of tuition as compared to a four-year institution. Shaw said a full-time student at Surry Community College will spend about $300 per quarter for tuition and books, at a rate of $13.25 per credit hour. Surry Community College students do not have to pay for credit hours exceeding 14, an added bonus for the community college student.

Even though a price tag of just over $600 per semester is still a bargain for an education, Shaw said it is a reflection of the economy. "Just a few years ago we were looking at $51 (per quarter)" she said.

budget looks like every year.

He said he has been involved with the community college system for quite a while both in working on their budgets and in other state-level community college issues.

This should be a great help to NCCC because the group works to help the entire system on a number of statewide issues, according to Allison Jonas, an NCCC spokesman.

One of the NCCC's main recommendations is that the state increase community college funding by $147 million a year, which would raise funding to the national average for community colleges.

Diamont said one of the greatest challenges the community college system faces is keeping the classroom available to everyone in the state.

"It's a constant struggle to make the classroom available to as many people as possible and to have it fill their needs, but at the same time to keep the costs down and keep it affordable," Diamont said. "The average worker will need to be retrained from three to five times in their lifetime, and the community colleges are the best way we have to offer them this training. The state's community college system is extremely important."

SCC Names Diamont As Representative To NCCC

David Diamont has been named as the Surry Community College representative to North Carolinians for Community Colleges, a grassroots support group working on behalf of all of North Carolina's 58 community colleges. Diamont is a State Representative from Pilot Mountain.

North Carolinians for Community Colleges is composed of a representative from each community college and works to build statewide support for the Commission on the Future of North Carolina's Community College System report, "Gaining the Competitive Edge."

The state's four living former governors — Terry Sanford; Robert W. Scott, James E. Holshouser, Jr.; and James B. Hunt, Jr.—serve as honorary chairmen of North Carolinians for Community Colleges. Governor James B. Martin also has lent his support.

"We're very pleased that David has agreed to serve as a representative from Surry Community College to North Carolinians for Community Colleges," Sherwood Smith, chairman of the Commission on the Future of the North Carolina Community College System, and chairman and chief executive officer of Carolina Power & Light Company, said in a release.

See SCC, page 8

"Demands placed on our community colleges by business and industry continue to grow, and our colleges simply must have the capacity to meet expanding enrollments, to hire more good faculty, and to provide students with sophisticated training equipment," Smith said. "The Commission on the Future found that unless we increase community college funding, North Carolina's economic health and quality of life will be unlikely to improve and reach maximum potential."

The Commission on the Future recommends that the General Assembly provide an additional $147 million annually to the state's community college system, an amount which would raise the level of funding for each college to the national average. Additional funding would be used to strengthen and modify the colleges in the areas of faculty salaries, planning, coordination with public secondary schools and four-year universities, and would improve customized training for business and industry.

Deal Worked Out With W.S.S.U.

News Staff Report

DOBSON — Beginning this fall, Surry County residents will be able to work toward a degree from Winston-Salem State University by taking classes in Dobson.

The Weekend College Program will offer five to seven three-hour classes taught by university faculty members beginning with the Fall 1992 semester, according to Dr. Jerry Hickerson, who oversees continuing education and graduate studies at Winston-Salem State.

Classes will be held from 6 to 9 p.m. on Fridays; 9 a.m. to noon on Saturdays; and 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays.

Hickerson is now determining what courses will be offered, but says that courses in the areas of business and social science are certain to be included.

The creation of the weekend program resulted from a survey by Dr. Joyce Pandelis, WSSU's director of extension instruction.

The survey was encouraged by officials at Surry Community College and designed to determine the degree of interest in beginning a WSSU extension program at SCC.

The survey showed overwhelming interest in WSSU courses and programs being made available to residents of the Surry area.

A follow-up meeting was held with SCC officials and prospective students in April. Winston-Salem State representatives from the admissions, business, continuing education, education, nursing and social sciences divisions attended the meeting and presented overviews of their programs to some 140 people in attendance.

Later surveys indicated strong interest on the part of local residents especially in the areas of business, education and nursing.

The WSSU/SCC arrangement is expected to benefit both institutions, officials say.

The classes to be taught by WSSU personnel are not offered at the community college now. Students will be encouraged to complete their associate degree requirements at SCC and transfer those credit hours.

Officials Consider Mount Airy Site

DOBSON — When elementary students leave Jones Elementary School next year, they could be replaced by college students under a plan supported by Surry Community College officials.

The plan, which is in the preliminary planning stages, would involve the college operating a satellite arm of SCC in the former elementary school facilities when the younger students move to a new school on Riverside Drive.

"We would like to have facilities somewhere in the Mount Airy area if it is possible somewhere down the road," said Dr. Claude Ayers, an official of the community college.

However, that's "assuming that Jones School becomes available at some point," said Ayers, who stressed that the plan is "preliminary" now.

While the college is enthusiastic about the plan, it would have to have — blessing of the Mount Airy Board of Education — which oversees the use of city school property — and other appropriate officials.

The school board originally planned to renovate the 1930s school for an office complex for educational administrators. However, an architect advised that this plan wasn't feasible, leading the board to decide to build a new office structure and allow the old school to be available for community uses.

Ayers says that the college hopes to offer Continuing Education, curriculum courses and possibly a learning center.

So far, other information, as well as the financial aspects of the proposed satellite operation, have not been worked out, Ayers said.

"If it were available and facilities were suitable ... then we would probably move right in in the following quarter and start off with classes," Ayers said.

City schools Superintendent Chuck Morris could not be reached for comment on the proposal, or any timetable the school board has to act on the plan.

SCC Plan Has Merit

There are many details to be finalized and approvals needed before Surry Community College can open a satellite college in Mount Airy — but we think the plan has great merit at this point.

The college's fledgling plan for using the old Jones Elementary School facilities to house college classes in Mount Airy after the school closes next year would help relieve overcrowded conditions at Surry Community College.

Everyone knows how much it costs to construct new buildings these days, and the beauty of the SCC plan is that it would make use of existing facilities and avoid the spending of a lot of taxpayer dollars.

It also would enable residents of the Mount Airy area to drive only a short distance to take college Continuing Education and other courses, fulfilling the true definition of a "community college." SCC has been seeking to open a satellite school in the Mount Airy area, but the fact is, there's just not a lot of facilities available to accommodate such a move.

And as if the other pluses weren't enough, the famed J.J. Jones School would continue to be a institution of higher learning under the college plan, when its elementary student body is moved to a new J.J. Jones Elementary in Fall 1993.

J.J. Jones School has a rich educational tradition dating to the early days of this century, and we can think of no better way to perpetuate that tradition than accommodating higher learning among community residents.

Of course, the Mount Airy Board of Education has the final say about the college using the spacious Jones School facilities, but we don't see any obstacles at this point. The board already has abandoned plans to convert the old school facilities into an office complex, opting instead to consider making the school available for use by the community.

Letting the facilities play an important role in the education of local citizens seems a fine community use to us.

Community Colleges Consider Change

Friday, September 11, 1992

The state's 58 community colleges have been on a an 11-week quarter system since the early 1960s — an approach that dovetails well with the system's long-held goal of providing job skills.

RALEIGH (AP) — Community college officials are considering a shift to a semester calendar. But they worry the change could shut out some low-income students.

"I'm sure some students probably would be affected," said Parker Chesson, chief operating officer of the community college system and former president of the College of the Albemarle. "It would be tough to keep everyone."

But shifting demands from vocational and technical training to college transfer courses have prompted a majority of the school presidents to ask for the change.

The state's 58 community colleges have been on a an 11-week quarter system since the early 1960s — an approach that dovetails well with the system's long-held goal of providing job skills.

The approach gives students a chance to retrain themselves quickly and holds down costs for businesses that underwrite the cost of worker training through the local campuses.

But more students are now using the community colleges to accumulate academic credits before transferring to four-year colleges or universities.

Virtually all of the state's other colleges — including those in the UNC system — are on a semester academic calendar.

"Going to a semester system is going to make it much easier for those students," system President Robert Scott told board members Thursday. "It also will improve the profile of the community colleges as truly academic institutions."

A semester schedule would require most of the system's 750,000 students to attend two 16-week sessions a year rather than three 11-week quarters. That means tuition for a semester, which is paid in advance, would cost students about one-third more than tuition for a quarter.

It would take only two semesters to complete a school year, however, compared to three quarters.

But some school presidents [illegible]

But the semester schedule must bigger problem involves the longer time commitment. For many of the system's part-time students, carving out enough time around work schedules is a bigger problem than money.

It also will be expensive for each school. Depending on how much money legislators might provide for the switch, it will cost the 58 colleges a combined total of $4 million to $8 million to retool courses and weed out offerings that don't fit a semester format.

Despite those costs, 42 school presidents voted in favor of the switch earlier this year. Board members did not vote on the issue Thursday, but a majority of them also seemed to favor the plan.

Scott expects to make a recommendation in October after talking with legislative leaders. If the system decides to change, the switch would probably occur in the fall of 1995.

Lending Program Offers Help in Rural Counties

By Debra BlakeOcock

The Yadkin Valley Economic Development District Inc. (YVEDDI), a private, non-profit community action agency, began a program earlier this year to aid rural small businesses.

Recently YVEDDI announced the second round of the Microenterprise Lending Recruitment.

The program began in the area in May and is a joint effort of YVEDDI and the Rural Center in Raleigh.

The program's aims is to promote increased economic self-sufficiency through the creation of self-employment opportunities, primarily focusing on groups who are traditionally under-represented in business ownership, according to Richard Miller, the program coordinator.

The program provides access to financing and support systems to enhance a business' likelihood of long term viability.

Miller said last week the second round of recruitment for rural loans, for existing or prospective businesses in Yadkin, Stokes, Surry or Davie counties, will begin in October with information sessions in each county.

The sessions are: Yadkin County—Monday, Oct. 12, 7 p.m., Conference Room 2, YVEDDI, River Rd., Boonville; Surry County—Tuesday, Oct. 6, 7 p.m. E Building Room 113, Surry Community College, Dobson; Davie County—Tuesday, Oct. 13, 7 p.m., Davie County Library, Mocksville. The session in Stokes County will be announced later.

James Reeves is the site director and B. Van Coe, a vice president with BNS Savings Bank in Elkin, is the chairman of the program.

The program originated in Bangladesh by a Harvard educated MBA, Muhammed Yunus, who returned to his native country in the 70's to begin a poverty bank. The Grameen Bank is now one of the largest and most successful in Bangladesh. It provided a total of about $16 million to people in 18 villages.

The YVEDDI program is open to anyone who wishes to participate. The few eligibility requirements are: a person must be at least 18 years of age; be a citizen of the United States or a permanent resident; be a N.C. resident; and own or operate a business or have a plan to do so. The program also requires that the business be in one of the four counties and have less than 10 full-time employees.

Miller stressed that individuals do not have to have their prospective business planned out, they just need to have a good idea and be willing to work hard.

The program is for those individuals who cannot get a loan from traditional banks.

The incremental short-term loans range from $500 to $8,000.

There are four stages in which individuals can go through to get loans. Once a loan is paid off an individual can be eligible for the next stage to get another loan. Each stage allows a person to get more money as long as he or she repays the previous loans in a specified amount of time. Miller said fourth stage participants must be turned down by a commercial institution in order to qualify for the loan.

Miller said stumbling blocks such as credit, collateral, loan size, and management experience are replaced by peer group support.

Miller said in the program they use a group support lending concept. Four to 10 people are put in a group and together they hear presentations from the members who want to borrow money. The group then approves or disapproves a loan and oversees the payment process. The members of the group are responsible for loans being paid; therefore, new loans are not given out until previous ones are paid.

The members are also required to attend Information and Orientation Sessions. They must go through technical training which is provided by the NC Community College System and the NC Small Business and Technology Development Center.

Miller said the YVEDDI program is the only program that focuses on the rural communities and is the only program of its type between east of Raleigh and Asheville.

The program is funded by public and private sources. The Ford Foundation just granted $5 million to the Rural Center. The N.C. General Assembly appropriated $.5 million in 1988 and an additional $650,000 in funds in 1991. The Charles Stewart Mott, Z. Smith Reynolds and Mary Reynolds Babcock foundations along with IBM are also supporters.

Richard Miller talks about the Microenterprise Loan Program that was just started in the area in May.

SURRY COMMUNITY COLLEGE — TO EACH HIS FARTHEST STAR — 1964 — SURRY COUNTY NORTH CAROLINA

SURRY COMMUNITY COLLEGE

As early as 1960 a committee was appointed to explore the idea of establishing a community college to serve the Surry & Yadkin area. In January, 1964, the dream became a reality.

Now Surry Community College can look back on 25 years of "Excellence." Today SCC has an enrollment of 2,575 curriculum students and 3,000 continuing education students. SCC is especially proud of the way they have broadened their services to business and industry training for their employees. SCC is also proud to offer a GED program as well as other adult basic education, which will help to alleviate illiteracy in the area.

SCC is expanding and broadening horizons all the time, offering many technical and vocational programs. Education is critical to the growth and improvement of our society and SCC is proud to be a part of this growing community.

■ Max Blackburn of Elkin, who was Director of Continuing Education at Surry Community College for 18 years prior to his retirement because of illness in 1990 and his death in December 1991, has been honored by SCC.

Blackburn

Following his death, a scholarship was established with the SCC Foundation in his memory to provide funds for those who graduated from the SCC GED program and plan to continue their education at the college level.

In addition, the SCC Law Enforcement Training Program in which he was extensively involved has established an award in his memory to be given to the outstanding student in each of the graduating classes. There will be two awards presented, with the first to the student who will graduate in March.

In recognition of Blackburn's years of service to the college and community, his portrait was painted by William Sanders, SCC art instructor. The portrait, presented to his wife, Pam, and daughter, Maria, now hangs in the college administration building.

Blackburn joined the SCC staff in August 1972 and retired with disability in May 1990.

How To Pay For It Remains The Question

By TIM PRESTON
Staff Writer

Surry County commissioners say they're all for the idea of building an indoor swimming pool facility in Dobson, but that they won't fork over the money.

County commissioners agree there are a great number of people who could benefit from an indoor public pool, and most agree the facility would be a good incentive for businesses to locate in the county. But they also believe there is no way the county could afford it now.

"As far as the financial aspect of it goes, we would be very hard-pressed to come up with the money at this time," said Commissioner Melvin Jackson of Mount Airy. "We are right in the middle of a major building drive with the schools and at Surry Community College, so an indoor pool wouldn't be a priority. The board would be very receptive to a fund drive to build, but I can't see raising property taxes for it."

Local residents are circulating petitions in support of an indoor swimming facility, which they propose to be located in Dobson, possibly on the campus of Surry Community College. College officials unofficially have declared their interest in such a project, but county leaders have not met with SCC representatives to forge any definite plans.

Jackson said he thinks an indoor pool would be "gravy on the biscuits" for enticing new businesses to locate in the area. But he added that county leaders need a strong infrastructure as a primary need beyond what the pool might offer.

"I would definitely support a public/private partnership," Jackson said of the project. "I am glad to see people working on this and I think the people should get together and work with the staff at Surry Community College to pursue any grants or other avenues they may have to support the idea."

Commissioner Don East of Pilot Mountain does not agree that an indoor pool would be of any great benefit in attracting new industry to the county, but says a such a pool would be a great thing for the people of Surry County.

"I would certainly be in favor of listening to a proposal about a public/private effort to enhance the idea. I am not in favor of using county funds to build an indoor swimming pool, or using only county funds to build any type of recreational facility. Government, county government, can't be all things for all people," East said.

"With economic development I can't say that I do (see potential benefits)," East continued. "I wouldn't necessarily see it as an economic boon."

Another commissioner, Dr. Jim Harrell of Elkin, describes himself as a longtime advocate for a swimming facility in Surry which could be used during winter weather. But Harrell also contends that the county couldn't consider paying for the construction and maintenance of such a facility.

"I was the chairman of the Pool Committee when we built the pool in Elkin, and there was an awful lot of interest in an indoor pool at that time," Harrell said. "Swimming has become very popular and a pool is something almost anybody can use. It is actually hard to think of anybody that can't use a pool."

As much as he likes the idea, though, Harrell says the project must come from the people if it is to happen.

"It is going to have to be — I can't see the county doing anything like that right now. It should be a coalition effort. It is hard to maintain a pool and pay for it, particularly an indoor pool. They are a drain economically and you must have a good program. I'm not sure it is even possible to make money from an indoor pool."

The Elkin commissioner said he would have no objections to placing the proposed indoor facility in Dobson, though it would mean extra driving time for those in his district. "We have people who are now driving to Winston-Salem or Mocksville to swim in cold weather. They would much rather drive to Dobson than Mocksville, for instance."

Harrell also cited the increasing use of swimming pools for rehabilitation, therapy and other medicinal uses along with the growing popularity of water aerobics as good reasons to favor an indoor pool in the county.

Board Chairman Fred O'Neal of Dobson reflected the opinions of other commissioners and cited the "tightening of everyone's belts and federal mandates" as reasons why the county could not foot the bill for such a project.

"I think it is a good idea. But the financial part of it may not be realistic," O'Neal said.

"It wouldn't be an even trade for economic development, but it would have to be an incentive," he continued.

O'Neal said he also would like to see communities around the county pursue alternative recreation efforts such as mini-parks, playgrounds, walking tracks and ballfields.

Commissioner Jim Miller has taken the idea of a pool directly to local civic and business leaders by challenging the Mount Airy Chamber of Commerce to get behind an effort to raise funds to build an indoor swimming facility.

Miller cited the non-recreational benefits of a pool, such as training of emergency medical workers and nursing students, during a recent speech to chamber members. "I would like to see this come to be and this is a great place to start," the Mount Airy commissioner said.

In addition to training uses of the pool, Miller is a proponent of the idea that the facility would be a great incentive for economic development.

"There is no question about that," he said. "Manufacturers bring their families in with them and if they aren't used to something like that it would be something really nice for them, and also for our own children here."

Miller said people who would like to support the idea should contact the Mount Airy Chamber of Commerce or write and call The Mount Airy News to express their opinions.

Telecourses offered at SCC

Earn college credit at home? Yes, you can. Telecourses—college classes taught through Surry Community College but broadcast on your television—are now allowing even the busiest student to make time for learning.

A telecourse is a complete and integrated instructional program that includes television programs, a textbook and a variety of other instructional materials.

Such courses allow students the opportunity to begin an educational program leading toward a college degree, or to take a course just for the sake of learning something new.

"Telecourses provide an innovative way for adults to begin work toward a college degree without disrupting their regular schedule," said SCC Telecourse Administrator, Dr. Sherry Shaw. "A telecourse is just as difficult as a traditional course, so a person must be motivated to complete the work. But, the overwhelming advantage of these courses is the flexibility they allow the students."

SCC is currently sponsoring an abnormal psychology telecourse which began in September. More than 100 area residents enrolled in this course which will end Dec. 5.

To get an idea of what a telecourse is like, check your PBS station any Saturday afternoon at 1:30. SCC psychology instructor and coordinator for this course Michael Wells explained the student enthusiasm. "Students really seem to get a lot from the video format; they can see the actual situations and facilities as they're being discussed, rather than simply reading about them in a textbook."

The next SCC-sponsored telecourse will be Introduction to Sociology. This course is designed to give students an understanding of how society operates. Topics will include groups, families, bureaucracies, social class, power, deviance, minority relations, community and social change.

Always a popular class, Introduction to Sociology can be used to fulfill an elective requirement in any technical or college parallel program at SCC, and will transfer to meet a social science requirement at any other college or university.

Although the course won't begin until Jan. 9, pre-registration for it will begin the week of Nov. 9-13, along with the regular SCC winter quarter pre-registration.

Dr. Shaw encourages anyone who would like more information about this course or other telecourse opportunities through SCC to call her at the college, 366-2921.

Bucks Trend

Local Industry Remains Strong

From Staff And Wire Reports

An economist suggests growth in the textile and apparel industry in Surry County is a fluke, but a county official doesn't buy that.

Any company that's growing rapidly is bucking a trend, said Carl Priestland, chief economist for the American Apparel Manufacturers Association.

"There's always companies that are bucking the trend," he said. "Even other people making the same things may be hurting."

Jim Grimes, the executive vice president of the Surry County Chamber of Commerce, disagrees.

"It's not luck," he said. "It's just a good chance for business to prosper."

Surry County's unemployment rate dropped from 7.6 percent in January to 4.5 percent in September, according to the state Employment Security Commission.

Robert Pugh, who runs the Economic Advisory Service for Surry Community College, said hiring by many textile and apparel manufacturers has been responsible for a lot of the improvement.

"One thing that has been helping the local companies is that they are very astute in their long-range planning," Pugh said of Surry County's successful manufacturers. "They are focusing on areas where they are already very competitive and have become knowledge-intensive and capital-intensive. They are focusing on jobs where they have a technical advantage."

While several Surry textile and apparel companies have increased their work force, hiring in the industries as a whole has been stagnant.

Nationally, 1,000 fewer people were employed in textile companies in September than in May, said George Wino, chief economist for the American Textile Manufacturing Institute.

Within North Carolina, the situation is the same, said Greg Sampson, ESC research director. "Manufacturing in general just hasn't budged much," he said. "It's just kind of flat."

But in Elkin, Chatham Manufacturing Inc. has been on a hiring spree. The company, which makes upholstery and blankets, has increased its employment from 1,900 workers in June to 2,300 now, said Tracy Walker, Chatham's employment manager.

Industry

"I've been here 20 years, and until now, I've never ended a day with 80 openings left after hiring all week," Walker said.

Other companies also have increased their employment, but not nearly as much.

Pine State Knitwear of Mount Airy, which makes sweaters, has been hiring 10 to 15 people a week for most of the year, and only half have been to replace workers who left, said J.D. Bartley, the company's director of human resources.

Kentucky Derby Hosiery Co. Inc. of Mount Airy, which makes socks, isn't hiring now, but the company has increased it's work force slightly in the past six months, said Brenda Goings, its director of educational services. She said she didn't know the exact number of new workers.

Cross Creek Apparel of Mount Airy announced in July, three years after building a plant in Surry, that it will construct another plant and hire 300 more workers over the next two years. Cross Creek makes golf shirts, T-shirts, sweatsuits and other athletic wear.

Renfro Corp. Vice President of Human Resources David Beal said the demand for that company's products, various styles of socks and stockings, has not increased, but remained consistent.

"We are steady," Beal said today. "We do have job openings we are filling, but that is mostly from turnovers."

Pugh, the SCC spokesman, added that the average weekly wage for textile and apparel workers is rising, although the local labor rate remains slightly lower than average wages across the state.

The number of people employed by textile and apparel manufacturers also has shown a slight increase over the last 10 to 15 years, Pugh added, with 2,027 apparel and 9,358 textile workers reported in the county during the fourth quarter of 1991.

An Ennice woman was crowned the 1992 Miss Mount Airy in festivities held Saturday night at the Andy Griffith Playhouse.

Edwards

Kristie Camille Edwards, 19, the daughter of Phil and Beverly Edwards, was named the 39th Miss Mount Airy out of a field of seven contestants vying for the crown.

She was crowned by Wendy Diane Loflin of King, Miss Mount Airy 1991.

Edwards is a student at Surry Community College where she is majoring in mathematics. She wants to pursue a career as an actuary, according to Judy Duke, executive director of the pageant.

Edwards sang, "Save The Best For Last" as her talent presentation. As Miss Mount Airy, Edwards will receive a $1,000 scholarship, a wardrobe and travel allowance each of $500 and a $300 photograph allowance, Duke said.

The first runner-up was Sheri Lynn Benge, 19, the daughter of James and Sandra Benge of Dobson. She attends Surry and Wilkes community colleges and is enrolled in the dental assistant program. Her talent presentation was a jazz dance.

Benge received a $250 scholarship and a plaque, Duke said.

Khristie Ann Hobson, 17, of King, was named Miss Congeniality.

All seven contestant competed in categories including interview, talent, evening gown and swimsuit/physical fitness, Duke said. The competition was held in front of a large crowd and focused on the theme of "An Evening At The Masquerade."

Edwards will go on to compete in the Miss

North Carolina pageant in June and will concentrate on that effort between now and then, Duke said.

As a preliminary to the Miss America pageant, the winner is to choose a community service to work with, Duke said. Edwards has chosen Hospice of Surry County because a member of her family has been involved with the organization that cares for terminally ill patients who wish to die at home.

Edwards has voiced a desire to work as a volunteer, Duke said, and wants to get involved with the DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) program in the local schools.

Part of her duties as Miss Mount Airy will involve speaking to civic groups, pageant appearances and other special visits including the elderly at local rest homes.

College Offers Class On TV

From Staff Reports

DOBSON — A special program being offered through Surry Community College will allow potential students to sit at home and watch television for their course credit.

More than 100 students signed up for an abnormal psychology class, or telecourse, which ends in December, prompting the college to make arrangements for its next TV classroom. The upcoming topic for students of the tube will be sociology.

Course Coordinator Michael Wells said the students of the abnormal psychology telecourse have been enthusiastic about the television-instructional program.

"Students really seem to get a lot from the video format," Wells said. "They can actually see situations and facilities as they're being discussed, rather than simply reading about them in a textbook."

The next telecourse offered is designed to give students an understanding of how society operates. Topics will include groups, families, bureaucracies, social classes, power, deviance, minority relations and social change. The course can be used by students to fill an elective requirement in any technical or college-parallel program at Surry Community College, officials say.

Telecourse Administrator Dr. Sherry Shaw said the TV classes shouldn't be viewed as easy courses for students.

"Telecourses provide an innovative way for adults to begin work toward a college degree without disrupting their regular schedule," Shaw said. "A telecourse is just as difficult as a traditional course, so a person must be motivated to complete the work. But, the overwhelming advantage of these courses is the flexibility they allow the students."

The "Introduction to Sociology" telecourse doesn't begin until Jan. 9, but pre-registration for it is scheduled Nov. 9-13, along with the regular Surry Community College winter quarter pre-registration.

More information on telecourses and other programs offered at Surry Community College is available from Dr. Sherry Shaw at 386-8121 or from the Elkin area, 366-2921.

Vernon Churaman, a native of Trinidad who is now an American citizen, addressed a group of students Oct. 28 at Surry Community College. He spoke of unity and working together, as well as telling about his homeland.

The speaker really held the attention of the students. He praised the newly-formed Inter-Cultural Society of Surry Community College.

Nica Gwyn invited Churmaman to address the group.

New SCC Telecourse Helps Students Earn Credit At Home

November 11, 1992

Earn college credit at home? Yes, you can. Telecourse--college classes taught through Surry Community College but broadcast on your television--are now allowing even the busiest student to make time for learning.

A telecourse is complete and integrated instructional program that includes television programs, a textbook, and a variety of other instructional materials. Such courses allow students the opportunity to begin an educational program leading toward a college degree, or to take a course just for the sake of learning something new.

"Telecourses provide an innovative way for adults to begin work toward a college degree without disrupting their regular schedule," said SCC Telecourse Administrator, Dr. Sherry Shaw. "A telecourse is just as difficult as a traditional course, so a person must be motivated to complete the work. But, the overwhelming advantage of these courses is the flexibility they allow the students."

SCC is currently sponsoring an abnormal psychology telecourse which began in September. More than one hundred area residents enrolled in the course which will end December 5. To get an idea of what a telecourse lesson is like, check you PBS station any Saturday afternoon at 1:30. SCC psychology instructor and coordinator for this course Michael Wells explained the student enthusiasm. "Students really seem to get a lot from the video format; hey can see the actual situations and facilities as they're being discussed, rather than simply reading about them in the textbook."

The next SCC sponsored telecourse will be Introduction To Sociology. This course is designed to give students an understanding of how society operates. Topics will include groups, families, bureaucracies, social class, power, deviance, minority relations, community and social change. Always a popular class, Introduction To Sociology can be used to fulfill an elective requirement in any technical or college parallel program at SCC, and will transfer to meet a social science requirement at any other college or university. Although the course won't begin until January 9, preregistration for it will begin the week of November 9-13, along with the regular SCC winter quarter preregistration.

Dr. Shaw encourages anyone who would like more information about this course or other telecourse opportunities through SCC to call her at the college (386-8121 or from Elkin 366-2921).

Free Financial Seminar Planned At SCC

Surry County Magistrate Steve Talley and Deputy Joey Floyd will present a two-hour free seminar at Surry Community College (Room E-110) on Wednesday, November 11, 7-9 p.m.

Topics for discussion will include who can use the small claims court, types of problems the small claims court can settle, and steps to take to get a case to court. The small claims court is designed to settle disputes of $2000 or less, and is ideal for the small business owner needing to settle disagreements over small amounts of money or property.

College Group To Help The Needy

From Staff Reports

The Surry Community College chapter of Phi Beta Lambda will sponsor two toy and canned food drives Saturday.

The honorary business fraternity will hold one drive at Mayberry Mall from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., while the second is scheduled at Wal-Mart from 5 to 10 p.m.

The group will be collecting for the Toys for Tots program as well as canned foods to go to needy families for the holidays, according to Steve Shores, a spokesman for the fraternity.

Those wanting to donate toys are asked to bring used items that are in good condition. The toys will then be given to a non-profit agency that will distribute them to those in need.

A second drive is scheduled Saturday, Nov. 28, at Wal-Mart from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Donations will be accepted at the college after Nov. 30, Shores said. They should be taken to the admissions building.

campus was a structure for computer, electronics, business and similar programs, which opened in the late 1960s.

There is plenty of room for expanding with a new facility, according to Richards. "We've got 100 acres," he said.

While a new building would not necessarily be dominated by the health-services programs, "the health services would receive top priority," Richards says. He added that more space in that area has been a top priority for several years, but stressed that other college divisions also could find a home in a new facility.

The only problem now is funding the building.

But on the positive side, this is an era in which North Carolina's community colleges are increasingly being called upon to help train tomorrow's workers in technical and other fields to better compete with foreign countries. Whereas emphasis was big on electronics about 10 years ago, Richards says the local focus now is on the health field.

The N.C. General Assembly earlier this year delayed action on approving a bond referendum that would have provided some $300 million to schools in the state's university system and about $243 million for community colleges.

The bond issue proposal has been shifted to next year's session of the Legislature, and is expected to be considered late in the session in the summer. The General Assembly will be considering whether to OK the measure being placed on the ballot to be decided by voters, probably next fall.

The proposed amount of funding for community colleges is now upped to $311 million.

Surry Community College officials hope some of those funds can be used for a new building on campus. Buildings at SCC are funding by both the state and county on a matching basis.

No specific construction plans have been prepared, Richards said, and no cost figures are available at this time.

College Feels Pinch

Nursing Program Could Benefit

By TOM JOYCE
Managing Editor

DOBSON — Surry Community College officials hope a $311 million statewide bond referendum will be approved next year for constructing a building to relieve overcrowding of nursing and other health-related programs SCC teaches.

"I'm optimistic," college President Swanson Richards said Thursday, adding that, "We're in dire need of space for our nursing programs."

Richards

In recent years, nursing and other programs have expanded at Surry Community College, Richards said. He mentioned that in addition to its nursing divisions, the Dobson campus needs more space for new nurse's aide training programs, and training related to the emergency medical field.

"So we're just running over in this particular area," the SCC official said, citing problems with more students being crowded into facilities that haven't grown accordingly.

"All of these programs are in the same space that we've had for the last 15 or 18 years."

The reason health-related programs are popular among students, Richards said, is that there are plenty of jobs available now for students trained in these fields. College officials speculate that this is because the elderly population is greater, medical care is more specialized today and technology has found ways to generally keep people alive longer.

In response to the demand, the local college in recent years has expanded its Registered Nursing program — seven years ago, the college was accepting 35 students each year. Now the number is 70. In addition, SCC offers some 30 slots for Licensed Practical Nursing students, "and whatever the need is in nurse's aide (training)," Richards said. "We've got a rather lengthy waiting list from people interested in taking — nurse's aide training."

"Last year, we had about 300 people that had made application for our RN program," he added, with only 70 taken.

In addition, the college uses the same space in coordinating basic training programs for emergency medical personnel as well as training in specialized areas. "And then we teach a variety of Continuing Education courses that are health-related," Richards said.

"We've more than doubled in enrollment (in health-related courses)," Richards said. "A new health-services building is not expected to allow the college to train more nurses, Richards said, but improve on what it's doing now.

"We need lab and classroom space — and just regular classroom space for the classes that we have," the veteran college president said. "I think more than anything else it would help the quality of what we're doing."

Miss Mount Airy, Kristie Edwards, sits in class at Surry Community College.

Brains, Perseverance Pay Off

By TIM PRESTON
Staff Writer

Kristie Edwards, Miss Mount Airy 1992, says she is a great example that proves that a pretty smile and good looks are not what is needed to win a scholarship pageant.

While Kristie definitely has a charming smile and a look which will turn heads, it is her ability to think, combined with perseverance, which she credits for her success in the local pageant. Winning the local preliminary will also help her fund her studies in the confusing world of mathematics.

"The big thing is that it will help with school," Edwards said as she watched the clock that would signal her next class at Surry Community College. "It will cover part of my tuition."

Edwards said the local pageant, and other preliminary contests for the Miss North Carolina and Miss America title, still suffers from an image of the "beauty" pageant, and likes to point out that mere beauty won't go very far. Instead she likes to think judges now look for a contestant with her mind tuned to the current events of the world, and the issues which face them locally.

"At this one (Miss Mount Airy) there were a lot of questions about the economy since that is one of the things which affect people in the area," she added.

She says she is "very" nervous about competing in the state pageant in June, but is pleased to have made it to the next round of competition. She feels the interview competition will be her strong round, adding she is most afraid of the swimsuit competition. Many decisions about her performance are unanswered at this time, she said.

"I will do a different song but we haven't decided which one yet," she said with a laugh. Selection of her dress for the evening gown competition also remains up in the air. "We want something elegant but we don't want to spend a lot of money. I may wear the same one again."

Perseverance is another key to success in the pageant field, Edwards said. "This was my seventh pageant so I think it is important to tell people that they should never quit. This is a child who always dreamed of going to Miss North Carolina," she said. "One of the things I want to do is visit my church in Statesville, Believer's Faith Center, and talk to the youth group. I think someone should tell them how important it is to stick with it and never give up."

For the moment Edwards is more concerned with her college studies than with the pageant in June. She wants to pursue a career as an actuary in the insurance field and says she has always loved numbers and mathematics. "I was looking for a career in a mathematical field that has a good salary," she said.

She has no particular insurance firm in mind for her first job, but does say she would like to remain close to home, possibly in the Winston-Salem area. She hopes to attend Wake Forest University after she has completed her courses in Dobson, but notes that she hasn't even applied at Wake as of yet.

Edwards, 19, is a native of the Statesville area and is currently living in Alleghany County, where she graduated from high school. Her parents, Phil and Beverly Edwards, are also students at Surry Community College.

As Miss Mount Airy Edwards will promote the work of Hospice, an organization which provides moral support for terminally ill patients and their families, and would like to help promote the D.A.R.E. program.

Courses

People need to know what to do in an emergency before medical help arrives. Since you, the citizen responder, are the person most likely to be first on the scene of an emergency, it is important that you know how to recognize emergencies and how to respond. The "First Aid: Responding to Emergencies" course will prepare you to make appropriate decisions regarding first aid care and to act on those decisions.

This new 30-hour American Red Cross course will be offered beginning Monday, Dec. 7, at 4 p.m. in Room C-112 on the Surry Community College campus. The course will include CPR. The course carried 3.0 public school teacher certificate renewal credits. The class will meet from 4-7 p.m. two days per week for five weeks excluding the weeks of Dec. 21 and Dec. 28.

Jeff Poteate, an Elkin police officer, will be the instructor. Registration fee will be $35 plus textbook.

For further information, you may contact the Continuing Education Division at 386-8121, Ext. 261 or 269.

Want to learn CPR?

Taking a CPR class may save a friend's life, and there are several places a Tri-County resident can go to sign up for one.

Surry Community College and all three area Red Cross chapters offer CPR classes whenever they have enough people signed up for them, and Red Cross instructors may be willing to travel to your town to teach a class.

CPR classes at SCC are taught whenever there is enough demand through the Continuing Education office, which can be reached at 386-8121.

Surry County Red Cross has regularly scheduled classes and can go anywhere in the county for groups of six or more. They can be reached at (919) 786-4183 or 1-800-866-3037. The Wilkes-Alleghany Red Cross, at (919) 838-4563, can organize classes for groups of six or more and may be willing to travel. And the Northwest North Carolina chapter, which covers Yadkin County, has regularly scheduled classes in Winston-Salem and can travel to Yadkin County for classes of eight or more. Their phone number is (919) 724-0511.

Some classes are offered for as little as $15, but costs will average from $30-$35 for each class. Class times average eight to 10 hours.

Career Workshop To Start Saturday

From Staff Reports

Professional managers, technical workers and salespeople who are unemployed or underemployed can consider attending an "upcoming workshop series aimed at helping professionals meet their employment potential as quickly as possible.

The workshop, sponsored by the Mount Airy Rotary Club, will feature guest speakers whose background experience could benefit others. The goal of the program is to help participants decide the correct path they should pursue professionally, and then determine the best way to get into that field.

The Career Continuation Workshop will be held on the Dobson campus of Surry Community College from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and continue from 6 to 9 p.m. Jan. 18, 20, 25 and 27.

The workshop will conclude with programs from 6 to 9 p.m. Feb. 1 and 3. There is no charge for the program.

Workshop leaders include:

■ Ron Ellis, the president of Management Recruiters, Mount Airy.

...people working beneath their educational training level and others who have not been able to find employment in their chosen field could greatly benefit from the series of programs.

■ Hayes Rutledge, a speaker/trainer specializing in self-esteem, values and team building.

■ Lee Booker, a licensed psychological associate in private practice.

■ Julie Rains, owner/manager of Executive Correspondents.

Ellis, who is also the chairman of the Rotary Club's Career Development Committee, said people working beneath their educational training level, and others who have not been able to find employment in their chosen field could greatly benefit from the series of programs.

"We aren't looking for people who want to go through just the first day," Ellis said. "We need people who are going to attend from start to finish. We will be going full circle from assessment to actually getting the job, which in some cases will mean going into business for themselves — and it is something that takes more than a single-day workshop."

Workshop activities will include complete self-assessment exercises, identification of accomplishments and skills, career assessment, stress-level identification and management, preparing resumes and references, interview techniques and letter and composition-writing skills.

More information on the workshop series is available from any member of the Mount Airy Rotary Club or Ron Ellis at 786-3600.

Audit Critical Of Community Colleges

RALEIGH (AP) — The state's community college system is overextended, poorly organized and more interested in boosting enrollments than in providing a quality education, an audit shows.

Community college officials say they generally agree with the findings, which were made by the consulting firm of KPMG Peat Marwick for the Legislature's Government Performance Audit Committee.

The results were presented Thursday to members of the State Board of Community Colleges.

"I can't say it's a big surprise," said Bob Scott, president of the community college system. "There are a lot of good things in there. Maybe it will give us the political base to do things we've all known we should do for some time now."

Auditors said many students are getting inadequate instruction because too many campuses offer the same courses. Before the state builds more campuses, it should weed out the weakest courses and consolidate the strongest programs.

If the board implements the audit recommendations, the community college system in the next century would look dramatically different from today's loose-knit group of campuses.

Instead of each school trying to offer a full menu of courses, only certain campuses would offer programs such as nursing, vocational training or college transfer classes. That means many of the state's 750,000 community college students would have to drive farther to get to their classes.

Campuses also would have to justify course offerings based on quality and schools would be financially rewarded for meeting academic goals rather than building enrollment.

The state board also would be expected to exert far more control over the 58 campuses, a recommendation that is sure to be resisted by counties that want to preserve their control over local campuses.

Still, board Chairman Bill Simpson expects many of the recommendations to be carried out.

"I agree with these findings and I think we ought to jump right in and get started," he said. "We don't need the General Assembly to tell us what to do."

College President Facing Surgery

RALEIGH (AP) — Bob Scott, president of the state's community college system, will undergo heart bypass surgery next week, a spokesman said Thursday.

Scott, 63, will have surgery to open one artery which tests have revealed to be 95 percent blocked, said system spokesman Mark Van Sciver. Dr. Robert Jones of Duke Medical Center will perform the procedure, Van Sciver said, adding that Scott is scheduled to enter the Durham hospital on Jan. 18.

He has been president of the community college system since 1983.

Scott, who was governor from 1968-1973, has been advised that his heart is completely undamaged and his health is very good. Van Sciver said Scott is expected to stay at Duke for five to seven days, then spend six to eight weeks at home to recover.

J. Parker Chesson, executive vice president of the Department of Community Colleges, will serve in Scott's absence, Van Sciver said.

'Skywarn' Spotter Training Program To Be Hosted By SCC

DOBSON — Surry Community College will host a "Skywarn" Spotter training program on Saturday, February 13, 10 a.m. to noon, as part of a regional project to enlist and train more local weather spotters to assist in fast reporting of weather data to the Regional Weather Center in Greensboro.

"Skywarn" is a function of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's National Weather Service, designed to record and report hazardous, severe or unusual weather conditions to regional weather centers.

According to County Communications Liaison Andy Webb, local spotters will report threatening weather conditions to the Sheriff's Department, who will then contact the Regional Weather Center in Greensboro. Webb is the American Radio Relay League's Emergency Coordinator for Surry County and also an audio-visual specialist at Surry Community College

Lee Groce of Yadkinville is the coordinator for Yadkin County. They also report emergency weather data to local police, fire and EMS personnel.

While especially for those persons with ham radio, scanner or similar equipment for quick transmission, the February 13 workshop is for anyone interested in weather watching and reporting. Many local firemen, Rescue Squad personnel, and policemen will also take part.

Weather conditions which should be reported, and which will be discussed at the February 13 workshop, are: (summer) funnel clouds, hail of half-inch or larger, winds of 50 mph or more, flooding, downed trees or power lines, and ground strike lightning.

In winter, snowfall in excess of four inches, severe icing on trees, streets, power lines, winds of 30 mph or more, hail of dime size or larger, and downed trees or power lines should be reported.

Similar "Skywarn" meetings are scheduled, at Guilford Technical Institute on February 20, and Davidson Community College February 27.

The meeting will be held in the Science Auditorium on the Dobson campus. There is no charge.

TESTING YOUR LIMITS

By DAVID ZANARDI
Staff Writer

Five Mount Airy residents decided to spend their winter vacation in a land where the warmest place to sleep was in the snow.

Jason Mitchell, Andrew and Joe Sloop and Josh and Jim Best spent six days battling biting wind and relentless cold while taking part in the Okpik Winter High Adventure program at the Ely, Minn. Boy Scouts of America base.

Given a chance to escape the monotony of work and school, they chose to learn the intricacies of snow camping, cross country skiing, snow shoeing and survival at 25 degrees below zero rather than feel the heat of a tropical sun on a distant shore.

"The perception is that people who do this are great, brawny, savage beasts," Jim Best said. "That's not true, I am very fragile. The trip was to test our limits. We wanted to find out if we could adapt and be comfortable in a different environment."

That environment was one in which flesh freezes in 5 to 10 seconds when exposed to air; an environment in which there are only 6 1/2 hours of daylight in which to work before the temperatures begin to drop quickly as the sun fades beyond the horizon; an environment where water is the most precious and dangerous commodity.

Their adventure started on Dec. 28 when they arrived at camp and began learning the lessons of survival. After three days of preparation, two guides took the Mount Airy group out into the best cold Minnesota could muster in the middle of winter. Mother Nature did not disappoint.

"It is amazing how much longer it takes to do things in the cold," Josh said. "Every task requires two-thirds more time to perform."

They were given four commandments of cold to live by: stay clean, don't overheat, wear layers of clothing and make sure above all else you stay dry.

Things didn't begin well. As the two fathers, Jim Best and Joe Sloop, maneuvered on snowshoes, Mitchell, Andrew and Josh took to the cross country skis with less than favorable results.

"They were falling all over the place," Jim remembers. "They had to pull a sleigh behind them while being connected to one in front. Then they had to negotiate turns while going down hill. They didn't know what they were doing or where they where going."

Frequent trips of extremely close contact with snow didn't help alleviate the cold for the three teenagers.

But despite youthful exuberance, the group arrived at camp before nightfall and began setting up tents using ski poles and bungee cords in the

During the process, Josh's ski pole broke and a bungee cord sent it straight into his face, creating a wonderful bruise but no real damage. Josh wasn't having fun yet.

The tent troubles persisted. When in doubt, the group read the instructions. The doubt increased, for the instructions were in Russian. But the tents went up and the group squeezed in and rolled into sleeping bags with food and drink nestled next to their bodies to keep it from freezing.

Body heat and the tent's insulation held out against unkind temperatures. Watches and video cameras froze, but no campers.

Morning came, along with some grumbling from Mount Airy's winter warriors as they awoke to sub-zero temperatures.

"Attitude was critical," Jim said. "The next morning there was a lot of long faces."

Other scout groups had ventured to camp sites the day before; only the Mount Airy contingent lasted through the night without returning to base.

Persistence brought little relief from the cold. Action proved to be the only tonic.

"You can't just stand around out there," Jim said. "Attitude takes over and you have to do something constructive."

Fortunately, the group had a task to complete while their eyebrows and unshaven faces became white with ice and snow. According to the program, the tents would be dropped in favor of Quinzhees, hand-made snow shelters.

The shelters are created by shoveling piles of snow six feet high and then hollowing the center of Quinzhees out. The hardest part of working on the shelters was lack of communication — no one could hear because of the amount of clothing covering their ears.

The group divided time between construction and preparing meals. "You have to eat constantly," Josh said. "They told us eat for heat. You have to eat before you go to bed, during the night, when you wake up."

"You had to drink six liters of water and as much carbohydrates as possible to keep from dehydrating because of the intense cold," Jim said. "The tough part is you had to keep the water as close to your body as possible to keep it from freezing."

Gloved hands didn't have to fumble through food preparation. The group used military issue Ready to Eat Meals or R.E.M.s as sustenance. Boiling the food packages in water provided the desired result along with another method.

"We called ourselves arm-pit cooks because all you needed to do was put the packets under your armpit and your body heat would do the rest," Josh recalled.

In a place decorated by ice-drenched trees and endless sheets of snow, the group managed to dine on eggs, crackers, peanut butter, ham, pork barbecue, cheese, rice, granola bars, chocolate nut cake and apple sauce.

But eventually the shelters were built and hunger subsided. With those two activities taken away, the group was left with only one other option left to keep off the cold — dance.

It may have been the cold or one too many granola bars, but facing the frigid price of inactivity the campers picked up their feet and twirled, high-stepped and anything else they could think of around their Quinzhees to keep warm.

"We called it the chicken-dance," Josh said. "We just wanted to keep our minds off the cold."

The cold caused more than a few problems. While digging his Quinzhees, Andrew, 13, had the structure collapse on top of him.

Did a frantic rescue attempt follow? Not quite.

"We all stood around laughing," Josh admits. "We heard Jason screaming for help and when he told us what happened we started to laugh."

In their defense, the group could still see his boots and there is no danger of suffocation because if the victim remains calm it is possible to breathe through snow.

A relatively short rescue attempt pulled the youngest member of the expedition free from his snowy prison. Andrew did sleep in the tent the second night.

The worst danger was sweat. If too much activity caused someone to perspire, sweat could freeze on the body and cause frost bite. Several times, group members were forced to take another person's feet inside their layers of clothing to bring heat to that part of the body.

The Quinzhees themselves provided the most warmth of the trip. "Snow is an incredible insulator," Best explains. "We had to take off a lot of our clothing because we were so warm inside the shelter."

Warmth caused problems of its own. When the group finally returned home, the change in climate had altered their metabolisms to such a degree that they could barely stand to be inside a heated home without feeling a great deal of nausea.

The group didn't mind. They had done what they set out to do.

"It was a great exercise in self-discipline and learning how to cope," Jim said. "It was a good test of our spirit."

Weather Spotter Program Planned

From Staff Reports

DOBSON — Surry Community College will host a "Skywarn" Spotter training program Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon.

The program is part of a regional project to enlist and train more local weather spotters to assist in fast reporting of data to the regional weather center in Greensboro.

"Skywarn" is a function of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's National Weather Service, designed to record and report hazardous, severe or unusual weather conditions to regional weather centers.

County communications liaisons in this area are Andy Webb of Mount Airy, audiovisual specialist at Surry Community College, and Lee Groce of Yadkinville, coordinator for Yadkin County. They also report emergency weather data to local police, fire and EMS personnel.

While especially designed for those people with ham radio, scanner or similar equipment for quick transmission, Saturday's workshop is also for anyone interested in weather watching and reporting. The meeting will be held in the Science Auditorium on the Dobson campus at no charge.

Weather conditions that should be reported, and which will be discussed at the workshop, are (summer) funnel clouds, hail of a half-inch or larger, winds of 50 mph or more, flooding, downed trees or power lines and ground-strike lightning. In winter, snowfall exceeding 4 inches; severe icing on trees, streets and power lines; winds of 30 mph or more; hail of dime-size or larger; and downed trees or power lines should be reported.

'Skywarn' Training Program Held

DOBSON — About twenty people turned out last Saturday as Surry Community College hosted a "Skywarn" Spotter Training Program.

"Skywarn" is a function of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's National Weather Service. It's purpose is to record and report hazardous, severe, or unusual weather conditions to regional weather centers.

According to County Communications Liaison Andy Webb, many of those in attendance were ham radio operators from Surry, Wilkes, and Yadkin counties. Local emergency personnel were also represented.

"Our main focus is education," explained Webb. "We want to train and identify those who are interested in becoming spotters."

Tornados were the primary subject of discussion. According to a brochure which was distributed, in the past 10 years, tornados, severe thunderstorms, and flash floods in the United States have killed about 3,000 people and injured thousands of others.

Rick Neal from the Greensboro Bureau of the National Weather Service showed two videos along with a slide presentation.

Viewers received a lesson on how to differentiate between tornado clouds, along with accompanying hail and storms, and "look alike" clouds. After a tornado is sighted, Spotters are to report it to the county Sheriff's Department.

After the meeting, Neal talked with and answered questions for many of the audience members.

Neal said another purpose of the meeting was to "help maintain interest" in the weather spotter program.

He explained that Saturday's gathering was one of a series of meetings throughout a 16 county area of northwest North Carolina. He added he would like for the meeting at Surry Community to become an annual event.

SCC Student Commends Film

Dear Editor:

I am a student at Surry Community College who recently had the advantage of watching a film called "Birth of a Nation" in one of my classes. Not only did I learn many historical facts about the Civil War of which I was unaware, I was also able to see it through various points of view — not one, nor two, but many. We must realize this. In fact, if more people would learn the word respect (my parents taught me this word), we might be able to share this planet with all God's children.

We all have the right to celebrate our heritage and beliefs, but we can do it tastefully. We cannot shove our beliefs down other people's throats.

Bravo for Mike King for reminding someone that they are but one fish in the ocean of life.

Don't Mess Up Colleges

Any successful operation, even our state's highly touted community college system, can always be improved because of the broad scope involved. But let's not "improve" to the point that community colleges no longer fit that definition.

We fear that might be the case if recommendations of an audit of state government are followed to the letter. Saying the 58 community college campuses lack consistency and control, the audit proposes restructuring the system so that it is based on a regional view of program needs rather than a local view. Among the 22 recommendations is one to move some of the decision-making authority from the local schools to the state, and new procedures that would force some students to hit the road for certain classes.

We think it's always good to have evaluations of programs such as the community college system, particularly today when we expect so much of education — only let's not get carried away to the point we ruin a good thing.

Certainly, the system should be streamlined and evaluated to ensure that taxpayers are getting the most efficient community college system possible which meets the educational and training needs of individuals and employers. We have no doubt several dozen classes at Surry Community College could be eliminated today and not hurt the basic goal of the college.

But it seems to us that this can be done without undermining what community colleges have been about since the 1960s. They've been a way for a young student to get the first two years of college out of the way without the expense and distance of a four-year-school. They've enabled working mothers and fathers to take courses right in their own communities to improve their lot in life. Companies have been able to rely on them to train workers for new skills.

"Community" is the key word here. It implies that the college is a reflection of the community where it is located, and able to be sensitive to the economic and educational needs of the specific population it serves.

You just can't achieve this with a regional approach. If this occurs, officials might as well scrap the community college system altogether and stick with the regional colleges and universities.

Sure, fix what needs to be fixed within the existing framework. But don't fix what ain't broke.

Ten industries (Brown Wooten Hosiery, Chatham, Spencer's, Renfro, Cross Creek Apparel, Henredon, Armtex, National Mt. Airy Furniture, Kentucky Derby Hosiery, and Unifi) provide GED and/or ABE courses for employees, most studying within their own plants under instructors provided by SCC.

Graduates of SCC's GED program have totaled over 200 per year for the past several years. The number is expected to reach 250-275 in 1993, the equivalent of an entire graduating class in a large high school.

PBL Of SCC Back And Winning Awards

The Pilot April 21, 1993

The Surry Community College chapter of Phi Beta Lamda business club recently attended the North Carolina PBL State Leadership Conference in Raleigh, held April 2-4 at the North Raleigh Hilton.

Each year, representatives from approximately 41 two-year and four-year colleges attend these conferences to compete in 37 events such as accounting, business decision making, computer applications, finance, law, and various other skills and academics.

Several of the major North Carolina universities and community colleges were represented this year, and all competed very well. The SCC chapter of PBL would like to extend a warm congratulations to everyone who competed and to thank the many sponsors for making it financially possible to compete.

Officers from SCC were: Lisa Goad, president; Betty Asbell, vice-president; Karen Edwards, treasurer; Stacia Heifrin, secretary; Melesia Lawson, reporter; and Tammy Edwards, parliamentarian. Competing members were Steven Shores, Kathy Mayes, Trish Hunt, Stephanie Sexton, Hannah Edwards, and Pamala Arms. Assisting members were Sheila Evans, Ennis Hatcher, and Jayne Hiatt.

The Omicron Sigma (SCC) chapter of PBL came away with more than a few awards. In Accounting II, Lisa Goad took first place and Betty Asbell took eighth place. Kathy Mayes took first place in Computer Concepts. Steven Shores took second place in Computer Programming. Third place in Impromptu Speaking went to Stacia Heifrin. In Business Decision Making, a group competition, sixth place went to Lisa Goad, Betty Asbell, and Stephanie Sexton.

Steven Shores, Kathy Mayes, and Lisa Goad will go on to represent SCC at the National Leadership Conference in Washington, D.C. this July. Everyone at SCC wishes them the best of lick.

As many people know, SCC PBL has been inactive for approximately five years and this was their first time back at the conference.

At one point during the awards ceremony, after quite a bit of yelling, screaming, and clapping from SCC representatives when one of their own won an award, the awards presenter remarked to the 400-plus crowd that SCC was definitely back and making their mark!

College Asks For Bond Referendum

By DAVID ZANARDI
Staff Writer

Surry Community College unveiled an $8 million construction program Monday that includes provisions for a $3 million local bond referendum.

If approved by the Surry County Board of Commissioners, a referendum on raising taxes to pay off bonds could go before local voters as early as November. It would then be up to voters to decide if they wanted to take on the additional $3 million in taxes to finance improvements to the college.

Fred O'Neal, the chairman of the Surry County Board of Commissioners, said that approval of the bond issue would increase property taxes by 6 to 10 cents for every $100 of assessed property valuation. For a $100,000 home, the increase would mean an additional $60 to $100 in taxes would have to be paid.

The entire construction project is expected to cost $8 million, but college officials are asking the state to pay the other $5 million.

> The entire construction project is expected to cost $8 million, but college officials are asking the state to pay the other $5 million.

The construction project, titled the Master Campus Plan, focuses on five priorities.

The first priority is a new 60,000-square-foot Health Sciences classroom building to house the college's Registered Nurse and Licensed Practical Nurse programs, the nursing assistants' classes, EMT training, day-care training and other health-related courses. The new building will cost an estimated $6 million.

The next step upon completion of the Health Sciences building is the renovation of the ground floor of the Technical Building to provide better use of existing space and to provide facilities for future programs such as an Environmental Sciences curriculum. The estimated cost is $200,000.

Expansion of the library would be the focus of the third priority. Possible renovations include expanding traditional library operations into the second floor of the present building, or relocating of classrooms and the Learning Center to the Technical Building. Funds also would be used to provide additional space and positioning of reference materials. The estimated cost is $300,000.

More adequate office facilities for the faculty and staff of the college is the fourth priority. Officials envision moving the office of the president and other staff personnel from the present Administration Building to another location, while releasing the present space to the Business Office. Also included in the fourth proposal are continued support of landscaping, maintenance and building programs along with the possible construction of new parking areas and a new entrance to the campus from South Main Street.

The estimated cost for all project underlined within the fourth priority is $1 million.

The final priority is the expansion of the college's cafeteria and the construction of a student center that will offer a more informal study atmosphere than the library. The estimated cost is $500,000.

Support from county commissioners doesn't appear to be a problem for the college.

"I will support the bond referendum," Commissioner Melvin Jackson said. "They have major needs at this campus. And they have touched the lives of a lot of people in this county.

"They have done so much for older adults and they have provided younger adults with a great place to start their education."

State Rep. Wade Wilmoth, D-Watauga, said he believes Raleigh will be presenting voters with a $989 million bond referendum in November. Included on the bond will be funds for higher education, public education and water and sewer expansion, according to Wilmoth. The state represenative said he expects to see roughly $200 million of the $989 million earmarked for community colleges.

"I think the attitude in the General Assembly is that the public has spoken, and it is time to react in a positive manner and pass a bond issue," Wilmoth added.

Jackson isn't counting on Raleigh for much help.

"With health care and the lottery, they may have too many irons in the fire," Jackson said. "When that happens, things like the community college usually fall on the back burner. I would hate to see the college fall on the back burner.

"We don't need Raleigh to drive this through, we can take the initiative on this ourselves."

If there are to be improvements, county commissioners say that the bond referendum might be the only option.

"I don't see any other way to do it with state and federal sources deteriorating," O'Neal explained. "There is no way we can drum up $3 million. But we have to do something, improvements are needed."

O'Neal said there is one possibility to decrease the burden of the referendum: to use funds placed in a building fund, created last year by the commissioners, for the college.

"We put $100,000 in the fund last year, and hopefully we can add to it this year," O'Neal said. "That may be able to reduce some of the tax."

Besides the referendum, the county commissioners were presented Monday with a budget request to increase appropriations to the college by 10.7 percent, from $748,300 this year to $828,000 in fiscal 1993-94.

The increase, according to college officials, was due to inflation and the decrease in the college's fund balance.

Monday night, the commissioners accepted the two proposals at a regular meeting, but took no action.

Dr. Swanson Richards, the president of Surry Community College, said he expects approval of both the budget and referendum request.

"The public has supported us in the past. Two bond issues have already been approved by the county and its commissioners. In 1964, a $500,000 bond was approved, and in 1972 a $1 million bond was also approved. That's a $1.5 million investment, and I think the people will continue to invest in the education of their children. If they didn't support us, they wouldn't send their kids here."

College wants $8 million for facilities, equipment

By JERRY LANKFORD
Staff Reporter

DOBSON—After announcing plans Monday at Surry Community College for $8 million in expansion and improvements, college officials asked county commissioners to authorize a local bond referendum in November to finance $3 million of the cost.

"I think we are at a crossroads here," said President Swanson Richards. "We are at the point that if we want to maintain the prestige and quality of our programs we need to add space."

College officials hope that a bill being considered in the General Assembly will result in a state-wide referendum for the community college system from which Surry would request the additional $8 million.

The plan includes five priorities. The most costly, $6 million, is a new 60,000 square-foot Health Science classroom building. This building would house the registered nurses', licensed practical nurses' and the nursing assistants' programs as well as emergency medical technicians' training classes, day care training and other health-related courses.

"Our health care programs are attracting greater and greater numbers of students," said Richards. "As a result, we have been forced to limit our enrollment in the nursing program and are now faced with a waiting list of applicants."

Upon completion of the Health Science Building, the next priority would be renovations on the ground floor of the Technical Building at an estimated cost of $200,000. These improvements would include the provision of better use of existing space and to provide facilities for future programs such as an Environmental Sciences curriculum.

Expansion of the library would be the focus of the third priority in the college's long-term plans is for $300,000 worth of expansions in the library. Richards said the extra space would be used to better position reference materials for their maximum use. The plan proposes the relocation of classrooms and the learning center, now sharing building space with the library, to the Technical Building.

The college also wants to use $1 million to upgrade their office facilities, "to make them adequate for

SCC Plan Is Taxing

Surry County government appears to be copying the philosophy of the new president — let's provide new facilities or programs, but only at the expense of more taxes, taxes, taxes.

An example of this on the county level surfaced this week with news of a $3 million bond referendum sought from county citizens to help pay for $8 million in new buildings on the Surry Community College campus in Dobson.

Granted, a new college building to help train students for the rapidly growing fields of nursing and other health-related careers would be a wise investment, along with the other SCC facilities the referendum would help finance. It would allow the college to assist employers by preparing graduates to go directly from the community college into the work force — which is what a good community college is all about.

We don't question the need for new facilities to meet ever-expanding needs for technical and other training at our local community college, but we must take aim at the way these are to be funded.

Every time a major project comes along, it's as if a flag automatically goes up among local commissioners proclaiming that more taxes would be the result.

In the case of the college bond referendum, its passage by citizens would represent another 6 to 10 cents on the property tax rate. That's added to another 6 cents Surry taxpayers already are faced with from the 1991 passage of a $31 million bond referendum for elementary, middle and high schools across the county.

This appears to be the same thing happening with the Clinton administration. More programs to help everyone are proposed to be financed with new and sundry taxes, without any attempt to first cut existing expenses.

It is somewhat refreshing to see our local officials telling us in advance what these wonderful new facilities would cost us on our tax bills. But it would be even more refreshing to hear them say: "Property taxes will be raised only as a last resort, after every effort is made to cut unnecessary personnel, maintenance, travel and other expenses first."

We've not seen any wholesale cuts being made in local government operations that would reflect that.

But a 6-to-10-cent property tax hike for community college structures sure would be a lot easier to swallow if we had the assurance county officials had attempted cuts first instead of just putting up the flag for more taxes.

NEW FACILITIES NEEDED

Time to help SCC

Surry Community College has done its homework.

In impressive fashion, the college made a compelling case Monday night to the county commissioners that it needs $8 million—$3 million from the county and $5 million from the state—to construct new facilities which will enable the school to meet the area's needs well into the next century.

Charts, graphs, narratives and chronologies detail where SCC has been, where it stands and what it must do to maximize its potential.

Chief among the needs is a $6 million, 60,000-square foot health sciences classroom building. Health-related businesses and services are among the more rapidly growing segments in our economy. SCC has long been in the forefront with its nursing program.

The new facility would allow for expansion of the Registered Nurse and Licensed Practical Nurse programs, as well as provide needed space for nursing assistants' classes and Emergency Medical Technician and daycare training.

The need here is not new. It was first proposed a couple years ago, but with no state funds forthcoming it was put on a back burner. Now, with the prospects of a statewide referendum later this year to fund community college construction, its prospects are improving.

SCC is proposing that another $2 million be spent on renovating the Technical Building and cafeteria, expanding the library and constructing a new $1 million administration building.

Local taxpayers would have to foot the county's portion. A $3 million bond referendum could easily result in a 10-15 percent increase in Surry's property tax rate.

But it would be worth it. SCC is a source of great pride for the county, and is a major factor, with its job-training programs, in industrial and economic recruitment. Through its continuing education division, it reaches and enriches the lives of thousands of citizens.

If the General Assembly does put a statewide bond issue before the voters this November, we believe it would be an ideal time for Surry voters to piggyback their own bond issue.

Surry Community College health occupations students are having to crowd into the Technology Building on the Dobson campus for classes.

Local Nursing Program Facing Space Crunch

(First in a series)

By TOM JOYCE
Managing Editor

DOBSON — Renae Wall of Pilot Mountain loves training to be one of tomorrow's nurses — she just wishes there was more space available for learning.

Wall and 154 other nursing students at Surry Community College must crowd together in facilities designed for far fewer students.

There's only one lab facility for registered nurse (RN) and licensed practical nursing (LPN) students to use — where they practice on mannequins and engage in other medical-related tasks. The lab is exactly the same used for some two decades by SCC nursing students, who also have only one classroom for fitting in all their course schedules.

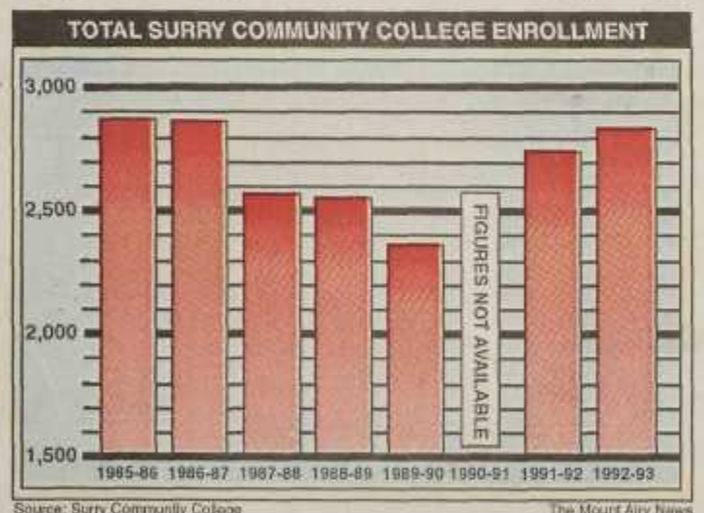

Storage space for nursing department equipment is packed, which might explain why there are only four mannequins available to nursing students to work with.

All in all, one might wonder how Surry Community College keeps turning out quality nurses year after year to help meet the demands of an increasingly challenging health-care industry. But the local community college manages to anyway despite a tremendous space problem for its health-related classes.

"We think it's a real good program, and we enjoy working with (SCC nursing students and graduates). We think they do a good job taking care of patients. They're an asset to the community," said nursing official Faye Haas of Northern Hospital of Surry County, which has a high demand for those students.

College officials hope to remedy overall space needs through a new $8 million construction program, part of which they propose to fund through a $3 million bond referendum from Surry County voters.

SCC President Swanson Richards said the plan is a result of a growing college trying to meet changes in student and employer needs and programs and provide facilities to keep pace in the future. The top priority in a new master plan eyed for the Dobson campus using the $8 million is a new 60,000-square-foot Health Sciences classroom building to house the college's RN and LPN programs, nursing assistants' classes, EMT training, day-care training and other health-related courses. The new structure would cost an estimated $6 million.

Sharon Kallam would be one happy woman if that were to come about. She's the chairman of the SCC Health Occupations Division and heads the nursing program.

Kallam lists space as a major problem confronting those training to be one of those nurses of tomorrow. Laboratory, classroom and storage space all pose obstacles in trying to secure that elusive nursing pin.

"We have 155 students, the maximum (in the program) ... and we have to schedule those 155 students in one laboratory space," Kallam said. "And it is very very crowded. There are times the students can't get in to practice because of too many students — too, too many students." Enrollment has doubled over the past 17 years, with the same facilities in use. There also is a long list of applications on file from others trying to get into the program.

Kallam said.

Renea Wall, finishing up her first year in nursing training, knows firsthand what it's like to cope with the space shortage at SCC while managing the rigors of learning to be a nurse.

"It can be done. ... it's being done. But it would be a lot better if we had more space to where we wouldn't have to run around each other. But we do work together as a group," the student said.

Storage space in the Technical Building, meanwhile, is "stocked as full as it can get," the Pilot Mountain student said, although adequate equipment is provided for the program. The instructors do a great job with what's available, said Wall. But getting in lab time is a hassle, along with problems that occur with students performing different functions in the same area and interfering with each other.

The new building project and increased lab space basically "would enable us a lot more time to practice our skills. It would greatly enable us to move more efficiently," Wall said.

"We have a big problem scheduling classrooms," said Kallam, the nursing program official, saying that clinical and classroom training often conflict. "There's just a bad scheduling problem with 155 students trying to use the same classroom."

Also due to limited space, computer operations that allow nursing students to simulate a medical situation and make choices about patient care have to be housed away from the nursing building, across campus.

"And when the students are working on these software programs there's no instructor over there," Kallam said.

Then there's storage: "We have up-to-date equipment ... it's just that we do not have space to buy enough new equipment and we don't have the space to store it," the SCC official added.

Richards, the college president, said the $8 million building program is asking the question, "Where do we go from here, so to speak?" While planning for Surry Community College has been excellent from its beginnings in the 1960s, he said.

There are five priorities under the Master Campus Plan for the future. After the completion of the Health Sciences building is the renovation of the ground floor of the Technical Building to provide better use of existing space and facilities for future programs such as an Environmental Sciences curriculum. Also listed is expansion of the library, more adequate office facilities for the faculty and staff, landscaping and related projects and expansion of the cafeteria and construction of a student center.

The entire plan is expected to cost $8 million, but college officials are asking the state to pay the other $5 million and hoping county officials will allow citizens to vote on the $3 million referendum for the rest.

Some controversy has surfaced over how paying off long-term bonds for construction costs might affect Surry's property tax rate. While some estimates are that it would add 6 to 10 cents to the tax rate, calculations provided by county Finance Officer Betty Taylor show that, assuming certain variables, as little as a 2-cent hike per $100 of assessed valuation could represent the money needed to pay off the bonds.

While such bonds typically are financed for a 20-year period, Taylor said the 2-percent rate could supply enough funds for the payback in as little as six or seven years. That would be based on 6.5 percent interest and other variables.

If approved by the Surry County Board of Commissioners, the bond referendum could go before local voters as early as November.

College Expansion Would Improve Services

(Second of two parts)

By TOM JOYCE
Managing Editor

Some see new facilities at Surry Community College as a wise investment to ensure local residents can be trained for in-demand jobs.

The SCC nursing program provides an example for that reasoning.

Nursing jobs are expected to rise both nationally and locally in the coming years. On a list of projected job gains in the U.S. from 1990 to 2005, 767,000 registered nurse positions are expected to be created — making RNs No. 4 on the list of top job-gaining occupations.

Locally, Sharon Kallam, the chairman of the SCC Health Occupations Division — which includes both RN and Licensed Practical Nurse (LPN) programs — also points out that Surry County has a growing percentage of persons over age 80. This means more nursing homes and more jobs in the future for licensed practical nurses, who primarily are employed by such facilities, Kallam said.

Northern Hospital of Surry County also is a big employer of SCC nursing grads, according to Faye Haas, a hospital nursing official. Thirteen members of this year's nursing class at the college are being offered jobs at NHSC, Haas said.

The hospital hires a good number of various nursing graduates every year, Haas added, "and many of those are Surry graduates." Considering the nursing needs of the hospital in the future, Surry Community College will play an important role with its capability to supply the qualified personnel to help meet those needs, she said.

It's a big advantage to the local hospital, for one, to hire these graduates since they work in the hospital while undergoing their clinical training and are familiar with its surroundings, Haas pointed out. And for the students, attending classes at SCC means they can live at home with parents at the same time and same money on housing, which wouldn't be the case with an out-of-town school.

While some hospitals are phasing out LPNs and nurse's aides, Haas said that's not the case at Northern Hospital, which still relies on the multiple levels of nursing students including both RNs and LPNs.

Students at SCC have a choice of a one-year LPN program or a two-year RN program. Taking electives can stretch the two-year program into three years, according to Kallam. An LPN is basically a "technical nurse" who follows procedures and performs similar functions, as explained by Haas. An RN is a professional recognized by the N.C. Board of Nursing who makes decisions about and oversees the care of patients.

RN students also can opt to earn a four-year bachelor's degree which can provide more of a general liberal arts education than the more streamlined two-year program, Haas said. This allows them to deal more with broader concepts because of the extra instruction.

As an LPN, an SCC nursing graduate now leaving school can expect to earn $8 to $9 per hour, or about $16,000 annually, according to Kallam. An entry-level RN can expect to earn $13 to $14 per hour, or $27,000 to $30,000 per year. Some 125 of the 155 SCC students are pursuing RN qualifications; a small number of males are in the nursing program.

Along with enhancing training, more space at SCC for health-services programs would help students in landing jobs in the view of Haas, the Northern Hospital nursing official.

"Because when we go over there to recruit, it's very difficult when ... people are piled on top of each other. ... It seems to me that space would be more conducive to learning," she said.

The projected changes in the SCC nursing facilities mirror a trend of overall growth over the years, according to these facts provided by the college:

■ Full-time enrollment has increased from 745 students in the winter quarter of 1970-71 to 2,130 for the same quarter this year.

■ In 1990, 100 percent of the graduating nurses passed the state RN exam on the first reading. In the same year, nursing enrollment doubled from 35 to 70. The college's associate degree nursing program was approved by the state Board of Nursing in 1973. The LPN program started during 1991.

■ Since 1965, state funding for the college has amounted to $74.4 million, compared to local funding of $8.07 million.

■ Each year, 75 to 80 percent of SCC graduates are either placed in employment after completing vocational, technical or other two-year programs, or assisted in making a smooth transition to four-year institutions.

■ Full-time college enrollment is expected to exceed 3,000 by the year 2000.
