Class Song: 'Goodbye to Sandcastles'

By: Tim France

Kay Murphy Paul
Mike Rosser

Goodbye to kindergarten
Where we broke all the rules,
Barbie dolls and waterguns
And plastic swimming pools.

Chorus:

Goodbye to sandcastles,
Tomorrow's here today.
Today is yesterday's tomorrow
And tomorrow's yesterday.

Boys on one side, girls on the other,
We played ball, we played Red Rover
Some kids' games just stay the same
But the kids who play them have to change.

From days in elementary school
To days in junior high,
The hands of time moved quickly;
We never questioned why,

High school saw us growing up
In body and in mind
Athletes, artists, scholars —
But brothers all the time.

Chorus

Learning from books and from each other,
Making mistakes over and over,
Asking questions, finding answers
Sharing tears and sharing laughter.

Now we've learned our lessons well,
But one is very clear:
We'll always miss the good old days —
The days that we spent here.

Chorus

Class Poem: 'Winds of Change'

by Kay Murphy Paul

There's something in the air that breathes of change,
A stirring in the wind.
It whispers to us all, "It's time to go."
We're on our own now,
We'll soon be scattered like the fragile seed
Of dandelions blowing.
Like fledglings, we are pushed toward the unknown,
Anticipating change.
We acted on the stage in many roles
But were still ourselves.
We competed as archrivals on the fields
But were always friends.
The music that we marched to, played and sang
Was from our hearts.
And now we move on to a larger stage
In bigger roles,
To more competitive circles, fields more vast
To prove ourselves,
To march to a different drum, to make new music,
To sing a greater song.
And when that subtle breeze that stirs us now
Returns in years and ages hence it will blow
Across the heart strings of our memories
And touch on chords of distant harmony.
We'll remember here and now
And yesterday
And smile.
What good days these have been.
